Some scholars have suggested cosmologies encompassing the entirety of the codex;[12][13] recently an outline has been made looking at the cosmology of each text individually.[14] A general overview could be seen as:

The Treasury of Light (the place of the right; separate regions in Books 1 & 2 only)
The Midst (mesos)
The thirteenth aeon (excluded in Book 3 and part two of Book 4)
The twelve aeons/heimarmene (separate regions in Books 1 & 2 only)

The first sphere (Books 1 & 2 only)
The firmament (Books 1 & 2 only)
Amente (Book 3 and part two of Book 4 only)
Chaos (Book 3 and part two of Book 4 only)
The Midst (mhte) (Books 3 & 4 only)
The Outer Darkness (Books 3 & 4 only)
Notably, the portion of Books 1 & 2 dealing with the myth of Pistis Sophia's fall and redemption use a different cosmology from the rest of those books. The most controversial point in this alternate cosmological conception is reference to the thirteenth aeon, Pistis Sophia's home, as a place of “righteousness;” this view of the thirteenth aeon is absent from the rest of the text.[15]

In Books 1-3, all the regions except for the punishment realms are also known as the Spaces of the First Mystery, and in Books 1 & 2, all the regions from the thirteenth aeon downward are considered the Outer Darkness.

Generally speaking, the aeonic realms represent the material universe, bounded by the stars and the zodiac. The Midst is the space dividing this region from the upper realms, and is sometimes a waiting space for souls before being allowed to enter the light realms. The goal of the soul is to ascend beyond the aeons and enter the upper realms of light. This is achieved by receiving the mysteries offered by the group represented by these texts.

The mysteries are not explicitly listed in the text; an initiate would most likely have to prove him or herself worthy by living for some period according to the ethical guidelines provided in the texts before undergoing the baptisms and gaining access to the mysteries. The Books of Jeu are noted as a source of the mysteries; it is probable that the texts found in the Bruce Codex are very similar, if not identical, with these texts.

Key figures

Pistis Sophia

The story of Pistis Sophia's fall and restoration (chapters 29-82) dominates much of Books 1 & 2. She dwells in the thirteenth aeon, is tricked into leaving her aeon and descending into Chaos, has her light-power stolen, and is not allowed to return to her place until Jesus ascends through the aeons. She recites many repentances and prayers, and is repeatedly persecuted by wicked archontic beings before being allowed to wait just outside of the thirteenth aeon for restoration.[citation needed]

It is noteworthy that she is not a divine being, as portrayed in other versions of the Gnostic myth such as the Apocryphon of John. She is a being of the material aeons, and her restoration is only as far as the thirteenth material aeon. The myth as a whole seems to have been adopted to address the beliefs of another Gnostic group, and to assert the superiority of this text's system: humans who receive the mysteries of this group can surpass Pistis Sophia and reach the divine realms of light.[citation needed]

Authades

Authades is the equivalent of Ialdabaoth/the demiurge in versions of the Sophia myth such as that found in the Apocryphon of John. Unlike Ialdabaoth, he is not created by the Sophia figure, and in fact he holds a slightly higher hierarchical position than Pistis Sophia. His sin is wishing to rule all the material aeons, and he grows jealous when Pistis Sophia chooses to worship the light rather than continuing the ways of the aeons. Authades appears only in the chapters dealing with the Sophia myth; elsewhere Sabaoth the Adamas is the representative of evil in these texts.[citation needed]

Jesus

Jesus serves as a teacher or instructor, teaching his disciples information about the divine world they will need to progress to a higher state of being, as well as knowledge of the cosmic realms, their inhabitants, and their functions. He teaches the disciples baptismal rites, and instructs them to give these rites to all who show themselves worthy. He is closely tied to the highest divine being. However, little significance is given to his earthly incarnation – the ritual bread and wine in the baptism is not associated with the Christian Eucharist, and the crucifixion and resurrection play little role. Here, he only gains his true garment and teaches the disciples the higher mysteries eleven years after his resurrection – downplaying versions of Christianity claiming his earlier teachings as ultimate truth.[citation needed]

Jeu

This is the demiurge of these texts. Jeu dwells in the Treasury of Light and organizes the cosmos. He places the archons and the aeons in their proper places, and assigns powers to the planets, effectively offering a divine origin for astrology. This is particularly noteworthy given the anti-cosmic nature of some other Gnostic groups.[citation needed]

He is sometimes referred to as the “Father of Jesus’ Father.” Jeu is considered the father of the Great Sabaoth, the Good, who provides the soul to Jesus’ earthly incarnation – thus Jeu is the father of Jesus’ earthly father. The divine Jesus’ true father remains the highest, ineffable God.[citation needed]

Zorokothora Melchisedek

Often referred to simply as Melchisedek, this figure also dwells in the Treasury of Light or Place of the Right. His primary role is overseeing transport of light from the lower realms to the higher light realms as it becomes purified. His subordinates also deliver certain souls out of the punishment regions when believers on Earth pray for them. [citation needed]

The Great Sabaoth, the Good

As mentioned above, this figure provides a power or soul for Jesus’ earthly incarnation, making him effectively Jesus’ earthly father. This role is most widely discussed through extensive interpretations of Psalm 85:10-11 in Chapters 62-63.[citation needed]

Sabaoth, the Adamas

This is the primary representative of evil or wickedness in the majority of the Pistis Sophia. He is accused of inappropriate sexual conduct, begetting archons and other beings, and as a result he is imprisoned in the bounds of the zodiac, or the material universe. For those human souls who did not receive the mysteries before death and are thus bound to be reincarnated in the world, he is also responsible for giving the “cup of forgetfulness,” denying them the knowledge they had acquired from previous lives and punishments.[citation needed]

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia
In 2012 Italian journalist Gianluigi Nuzzi published letters from Archbishop Carlo Maria Viganò in which he exposed corruption that caused the Holy See to pay increased prices for contracts.

During the following months, the situation intensified as documents were leaked to Italian journalists, revealing power struggles inside the Vatican due to its efforts to implement greater financial transparency and comply with international norms to fight money laundering. In early 2012, an anonymous letter made newspaper headlines for its warning of a death threat against Pope Benedict XVI.[1] The scandal increased in May 2012 when Nuzzi published a book entitled His Holiness: The Secret Papers of Benedict XVI consisting of confidential letters and memos between Pope Benedict and his personal secretary, a controversial book that describes the Vatican as riven with jealousy, intrigue and factional fighting.[2] The book reveals details about the Pope's personal finances and includes tales of bribes made to procure an audience with him.

Leaks
The scandal was first revealed during late January 2012 by a television program named The Untouchables (Gli intoccabili), broadcast in Italy by La7,[3] and increased during May 2012 when Gianluigi Nuzzi published a book entitled His Holiness: The Secret Papers of Benedict XVI consisting of confidential letters and memorandums.[2]

Among the documents were letters written both to the Pope and to the Secretary of State, Cardinal Tarcisio Bertone, by then apostolic nuncio to the United States, Italian Archbishop Carlo Maria Viganò, complaining of corruption in Vatican finances and a campaign of defamation against him. Viganò, formerly the second-ranked Vatican administrator to the Pope, allegedly asked not to be transferred for having exposed corruption that cost the Holy See artificially high contract prices.[4]

An anonymous document described a conversation with Cardinal Paolo Romeo of Palermo, Sicily, in which he allegedly predicted the Pope would be dead within twelve months. According to John L. Allen Jr., none of the information leaked seemed "especially fatal". "It's not so much the content of the leaks, but the fact of them, which is the real problem".[5]

Vatican internal investigation
The Vatican investigation of the leaks worked along several tracks, with Vatican magistrates pursuing the criminal investigation and the Vatican Secretariat of State an administrative investigation. In March 2012, Pope Benedict appointed a commission of cardinals to investigate the leaks. The three cardinals appointed by Benedict acted in a supervisory role, examining more than the narrow criminal scope of the leaks and interviewing much of the Vatican bureaucracy; they purportedly discovered a sex and blackmail scandal.[6] They reported directly to the Pope, and could both share information with Vatican prosecutors and receive information from them, according to Vatican spokesman the Reverend Federico Lombardi. The group was directed by Cardinal Julián Herranz Casado, an Opus Dei prelate who headed the Vatican's legal office as well as the disciplinary commission of the Vatican bureaucracy before retiring.[7]

Papal response

On 30 May 2012, Pope Benedict made his first direct comments on the scandal in remarks at the end of his weekly general audience. He said the "exaggerated" and "gratuitous" rumours had offered a false image of the Holy See, commenting: "The events of recent days about the Curia and my collaborators have brought sadness in my heart. ...I want to renew my trust in and encouragement of my closest collaborators and all those who every day, with loyalty and a spirit of sacrifice and in silence, help me fulfill my ministry."[8]

On 26 July, Pope Benedict held a meeting of the commission of cardinals. Also in attendance were the chief of the Vatican police, the judges involved with the case, and representatives of the Vatican Secretariat of State, according to a report from Federico Lombardi.[9]

Months later, after Paolo Gabriele and Claudio Sciarpelletti—two Vatican aides—were convicted for the case, he pardoned them.[10]

Arrests and convictions

Paolo Gabriele, who had been the pope's personal butler since 2007, was arrested by Vatican police on 23 May 2012, after confidential letters and documents addressed to the Pope and other Vatican officials were found in his Vatican apartment. He seemed to have been leaking classified information to the journalist Gianluigi Nuzzi.[11][12] Similar documents had been published by Italian media during the previous five months; many of them dealt with allegations of corruption, abuse of power and a lack of financial accountability at the Vatican.[13]

Piero Antonio Bonnet, the Vatican's judge, had been instructed to examine the evidence of the case and to decide whether there was sufficient material to proceed to trial. Gabriele faced a maximum sentence of eight years for the illegal possession of documents of a chief of state.[14]

Paolo Gabriele was indicted by Vatican magistrates on 13 August 2012 for aggravated theft.[15] The first hearing occurred on 29 September 2012.

Gabriele's trial began on 2 October 2012.[16] He claimed to have stolen the documents to fight "evil and corruption" and put the Vatican "back on track".[16] Multiple evaluations of Gabriele's mental health provided conflicting results: one report concluded that Gabriele suffered from a "fragile personality with paranoid tendencies covering profound personal insecurity", while another found that Gabriele showed no adequate signs of a major psychological disorder nor posing any serious threat to himself or others.[17] Vatican police seized encrypted documents and confidential papers that the Pope had marked "to be destroyed" when they raided the apartment of his butler, the court heard.[18]

On 6 October, Paolo Gabriele was found to be guilty of theft, and was sentenced to a reduced sentence of 18 months. He was also ordered to pay legal expenses.[19][20] However, Gabriele served his sentence in the Vatican itself, as opposed to the usual arrangement of sending prisoners to serve time in an Italian prison, due to concerns that he might reveal more secrets.[21]

Claudio Sciarpelletti, a computer specialist at the Secretariat of State who allegedly helped Gabriele, was arrested and convicted of obstruction of justice based on conflicting information he gave to prosecutors. He was sentenced to four months, which was amended to two months suspended with five years' probation due to his long years of service and lack of a prior criminal record.[22]

Aftermath of the investigation

One of the reasons listed for the dismissal of Ettore Gotti Tedeschi as president of the Vatican Bank was the "Failure to provide any formal explanation for the dissemination of documents last known to be in the president's possession."[23]

On 17 December 2012, the Pope received a report on "Vatican lobbies" prepared by Cardinals Julián Herranz, Salvatore De Giorgi, a former archbishop of Palermo, and Jozef Tomko. The same day, the Pope reportedly decided to resign, a decision he made public in February 2013, becoming the first in almost 600 years to resign of his own volition.[24] The resignation of Pope Benedict XVI occurred on 28 February.[25][26][27]

Vatican spokesman Federico Lombardi, speaking on Vatican Radio on 23 February 2013, strongly criticized media coverage[6][28] of the report[29] as a financial scandal which purportedly became, upon the cardinals' internal investigation, a homosexual sex and blackmail scandal as well.[30] Although the dossier was available only to Pope Emeritus Benedict XVI and the investigators themselves, the latter were free to discuss the results of their investigation with the cardinal electors of the March 2013 papal conclave, and the dossier itself was to have been given to Benedict's successor, Pope Francis.[31] On 1 March 2013, Lombardi reported that "two or three phones" had been tapped.[32][33]

On 12 June 2013, it was reported that leaked notes of a private conversation between Pope Francis and Catholic officials at the Latin American Conference of Religious confirmed the existence of "a stream of corruption", and that "the 'gay lobby' is mentioned, and it is true, it is there. ...We need to see what we can do." According to La Repubblica: "Vatican investigators had identified a network of gay prelates."[34] Vatican spokesman Federico Lombardi made no comment on the remarks made in "a private meeting".[35]

In July 2016, the Vatican Court acquitted the two journalists involved in the "Vatileaks" trial, citing freedom of expression as its reason. Judge Giuseppe Della Torre, director of the tribunal of the Vatican City State, declared that "the court had no legitimate jurisdiction over Gianluigi Nuzzi and Emiliano Fittipaldi."[36] Monsignor Lucio Balda, by contrast, was sentenced to 18 months in prison for leaking official documents and his sentence began on 22 August in a cell within the confines of the Vatican.[37] Requests for a papal pardon for Balda were met with silence,[38] until Pope Francis granted him clemency after he served half his jail sentence.[39]

Paolo Gabriele died on 24 November 2020, at the age of 54, following a long illness.[40]

Vatican leaks scandal

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

In 2012 Italian journalist Gianluigi Nuzzi published letters from Archbishop Carlo Maria Viganò in which he exposed corruption that caused the Holy See to pay increased prices for contracts.

During the following months, the situation intensified as documents were leaked to Italian journalists, revealing power struggles inside the Vatican due to its efforts to implement greater financial transparency and comply with international norms to fight money laundering. In early 2012, an anonymous letter made newspaper headlines for its warning of a death threat against Pope Benedict XVI.[1] The scandal increased in May 2012 when Nuzzi published a book entitled His Holiness: The Secret Papers of Benedict XVI consisting of confidential letters and memos between Pope Benedict and his personal secretary, a controversial book that describes the Vatican as riven with jealousy, intrigue and factional fighting.[2] The book reveals details about the Pope's personal finances and includes tales of bribes made to procure an audience with him.

Leaks

The scandal was first revealed during late January 2012 by a television program named The Untouchables (Gli intoccabili), broadcast in Italy by La7,[3] and increased during May 2012 when Gianluigi Nuzzi published a book entitled His Holiness: The Secret Papers of Benedict XVI consisting of confidential letters and memorandums.[2]

Among the documents were letters written both to the Pope and to the Secretary of State, Cardinal Tarcisio Bertone, by then apostolic nuncio to the United States, Italian Archbishop Carlo Maria Viganò, complaining of corruption in Vatican finances and a campaign of defamation against him. Viganò, formerly the second-ranked Vatican administrator to the Pope, allegedly asked not to be transferred for having exposed corruption that cost the Holy See artificially high contract prices.[4]

An anonymous document described a conversation with Cardinal Paolo Romeo of Palermo, Sicily, in which he allegedly predicted the Pope would be dead within twelve months. According to John L. Allen Jr., none of the information leaked seemed "especially fatal". "It's not so much the content of the leaks, but the fact of them, which is the real problem".[5]

Vatican internal investigation

The Vatican investigation of the leaks worked along several tracks, with Vatican magistrates pursuing the criminal investigation and the Vatican Secretariat of State an administrative investigation. In March 2012, Pope Benedict appointed a commission of cardinals to investigate the leaks. The three cardinals appointed by Benedict acted in a supervisory role, examining more than the narrow criminal scope of the leaks and interviewing much of the Vatican bureaucracy; they purportedly discovered a sex and blackmail scandal.[6] They reported directly to the Pope, and could both share information with Vatican prosecutors and receive information from them, according to Vatican spokesman the Reverend Federico Lombardi. The group was directed by Cardinal Julián Herranz Casado, an Opus Dei prelate who headed the Vatican's legal office as well as the disciplinary commission of the Vatican bureaucracy before retiring.[7]

Papal response

On 30 May 2012, Pope Benedict made his first direct comments on the scandal in remarks at the end of his weekly general audience. He said the "exaggerated" and "gratuitous" rumours had offered a false image of the Holy See, commenting: "The events of recent days about the Curia and my collaborators have brought sadness in my heart. ...I want to renew my trust in and encouragement of my closest collaborators and all those who every day, with loyalty and a spirit of sacrifice and in silence, help me fulfill my ministry."[8]

On 26 July, Pope Benedict held a meeting of the commission of cardinals. Also in attendance were the chief of the Vatican police, the judges involved with the case, and representatives of the Vatican Secretariat of State, according to a report from Federico Lombardi.[9]

Months later, after Paolo Gabriele and Claudio Sciarpelletti—two Vatican aides—were convicted for the case, he pardoned them.[10]

Arrests and convictions

Paolo Gabriele, who had been the pope's personal butler since 2007, was arrested by Vatican police on 23 May 2012, after confidential letters and documents addressed to the Pope and other Vatican officials were found in his Vatican apartment. He seemed to have been leaking classified information to the journalist Gianluigi Nuzzi.[11][12] Similar documents had been published by Italian media during the previous five months; many of them dealt with allegations of corruption, abuse of power and a lack of financial accountability at the Vatican.[13]

Piero Antonio Bonnet, the Vatican's judge, had been instructed to examine the evidence of the case and to decide whether there was sufficient material to proceed to trial. Gabriele faced a maximum sentence of eight years for the illegal possession of documents of a chief of state.[14]

Paolo Gabriele was indicted by Vatican magistrates on 13 August 2012 for aggravated theft.[15] The first hearing occurred on 29 September 2012.

Gabriele's trial began on 2 October 2012.[16] He claimed to have stolen the documents to fight "evil and corruption" and put the Vatican "back on track".[16] Multiple evaluations of Gabriele's mental health provided conflicting results: one report concluded that Gabriele suffered from a "fragile personality with paranoid tendencies covering profound personal insecurity", while another found that Gabriele showed no adequate signs of a major psychological disorder nor posing any serious threat to himself or others.[17] Vatican police seized encrypted documents and confidential papers that the Pope had marked "to be destroyed" when they raided the apartment of his butler, the court heard.[18]

On 6 October, Paolo Gabriele was found to be guilty of theft, and was sentenced to a reduced sentence of 18 months. He was also ordered to pay legal expenses.[19][20] However, Gabriele served his sentence in the Vatican itself, as opposed to the usual arrangement of sending prisoners to serve time in an Italian prison, due to concerns that he might reveal more secrets.[21]

Claudio Sciarpelletti, a computer specialist at the Secretariat of State who allegedly helped Gabriele, was arrested and convicted of obstruction of justice based on conflicting information he gave to prosecutors. He was sentenced to four months, which was amended to two months suspended with five years' probation due to his long years of service and lack of a prior criminal record.[22]

Aftermath of the investigation

One of the reasons listed for the dismissal of Ettore Gotti Tedeschi as president of the Vatican Bank was the "Failure to provide any formal explanation for the dissemination of documents last known to be in the president's possession."[23]

On 17 December 2012, the Pope received a report on "Vatican lobbies" prepared by Cardinals Julián Herranz, Salvatore De Giorgi, a former archbishop of Palermo, and Jozef Tomko. The same day, the Pope reportedly decided to resign, a decision he made public in February 2013, becoming the first in almost 600 years to resign of his own volition.[24] The resignation of Pope Benedict XVI occurred on 28 February.[25][26][27]

Vatican spokesman Federico Lombardi, speaking on Vatican Radio on 23 February

2013, strongly criticized media coverage[6][28] of the report[29] as a financial scandal which purportedly became, upon the cardinals' internal investigation, a homosexual sex and blackmail scandal as well.[30] Although the dossier was available only to Pope Emeritus Benedict XVI and the investigators themselves, the latter were free to discuss the results of their investigation with the cardinal electors of the March 2013 papal conclave, and the dossier itself was to have been given to Benedict's successor, Pope Francis.[31] On 1 March 2013, Lombardi reported that "two or three phones" had been tapped.[32][33]

On 12 June 2013, it was reported that leaked notes of a private conversation between Pope Francis and Catholic officials at the Latin American Conference of Religious confirmed the existence of "a stream of corruption", and that "the 'gay lobby' is mentioned, and it is true, it is there. ...We need to see what we can do." According to La Repubblica: "Vatican investigators had identified a network of gay prelates."[34] Vatican spokesman Federico Lombardi made no comment on the remarks made in "a private meeting".[35]

In July 2016, the Vatican Court acquitted the two journalists involved in the "Vatileaks" trial, citing freedom of expression as its reason. Judge Giuseppe Della Torre, director of the tribunal of the Vatican City State, declared that "the court had no legitimate jurisdiction over Gianluigi Nuzzi and Emiliano Fittipaldi."[36] Monsignor Lucio Balda, by contrast, was sentenced to 18 months in prison for leaking official documents and his sentence began on 22 August in a cell within the confines of the Vatican.[37] Requests for a papal pardon for Balda were met with silence,[38] until Pope Francis granted him clemency after he served half his jail sentence.[39]

Paolo Gabriele died on 24 November 2020, at the age of 54, following a long illness.[40]

African / Afro-Caribbean systems (e.g. Vodou, Ifá, Santería)

AI Overview
Afro-Caribbean religious systems, also known as Afro-diasporic religions, are spiritual traditions that emerged among the descendants of enslaved Africans in the Americas and Caribbean, blending African beliefs with elements of Roman Catholicism. Key examples include Vodou, Ifá, and Santería.
Key Systems
Vodou (Haitian): Originating in Haiti, Vodou is rooted in the beliefs of the Fon and Ewe peoples of West Africa. Practitioners worship a pantheon of spirits called lwa through drumming, dancing, and spirit possession rituals. It incorporates Catholic elements and played a significant role in the Haitian Revolution.
Ifá (Yoruba): Ifá is a complex system of divination and a traditional Yoruba religion from West Africa. It is considered the "root" of many Afro-Caribbean religions and focuses on aligning human destiny (ori) with the will of the supreme creator (Olodumare) and the guidance of the orishas. Ifá priests (babalawos) use specific tools like the Opele chain or Ikin nuts on an Opon Ifá (divination tray).

Santería (also known as La Regla de Ocha or Lucumí): Developed in Cuba, Santería is a syncretic religion that merges the Yoruba orisha worship with Spanish Catholicism. Enslaved Africans in Cuba preserved their traditions by associating their deities (orishas like Oshun, Shango, and Yemaya) with Catholic saints, an adaptation that allowed their survival under colonial rule. It features complex rituals, music with bata drums, and an extensive system of herbal medicine.
Other Notable Systems
Candomblé: A major Afro-Brazilian religion centered around the worship of orishas. While similar to Santería, it developed in Brazil and has some differences in names and characteristics.
Palo Mayombe: An African-derived system, primarily from the Congo region, that is practiced in Cuba and other parts of the diaspora. It often involves working with spirits of the dead.
Hoodoo/Rootwork: A spiritual practice originating in the Southern United States that focuses more on practical magic, herbal medicine, and rootwork rather than a formalized religion or church structure.
These diverse traditions represent the resilience of African spirituality, adapting and thriving in new contexts despite centuries of oppression and misrepresentation. Many practitioners today continue to follow these traditions, seeking balance and harmony with the spiritual world.

Santería (Spanish pronunciation: [san.te.ˈɾi.a]), also known as Regla de Ocha, Regla Lucumí, or Lucumí, is an African diaspora religion that developed in Cuba during the late 19th century. It arose amid a process of syncretism between the traditional Yoruba religion of West Africa, Catholicism, and Spiritism. There is no central authority in control of Santería and much diversity exists among practitioners, who are known as creyentes ('believers').

Santería teaches the existence of a transcendent creator divinity, Olodumare, under whom are spirits known as oricha. Typically deriving their names and attributes from traditional Yoruba deities, these oricha are equated with Roman Catholic saints and associated with various myths. Each human is deemed to have a personal link to a particular oricha who influences their personality. Olodumare is believed to be the ultimate source of aché, a supernatural force permeating the universe that can be manipulated through ritual actions. Practitioners venerate the oricha at altars, either in the home or in the ilé (house-temple), which is run by a santero (priest) or santera (priestess). Membership of the ilé requires initiation. Offerings to the oricha include fruit, liquor, flowers and sacrificed animals. A central ritual is the toque de santo, in which practitioners drum, sing, and dance to encourage an oricha to possess one of their members and thus communicate with them. Several forms of divination are used, including Ifá, to decipher messages from the oricha. Offerings are also given to the spirits of the dead, with some practitioners identifying as spirit mediums. Healing rituals and the preparation of herbal remedies and talismans also play a prominent role.

Santería developed among Afro-Cuban communities following the Atlantic slave trade of the 16th to 19th centuries. It formed through the blending of the traditional religions brought to Cuba by enslaved West Africans, the majority of them Yoruba, and Roman Catholicism, the only religion legally permitted on the island by the Spanish colonial government. In urban areas of West Cuba, these traditions merged with Spiritist ideas to form the earliest ilés during the late 19th century. After the Cuban War of Independence resulted in an independent republic in 1898, its new constitution enshrined freedom of religion. Santería nevertheless remained marginalized by Cuba's Roman Catholic, Euro-Cuban establishment, which typically viewed it as brujería (witchcraft). In the 1960s, growing emigration following the Cuban Revolution spread Santería abroad. The late 20th century saw growing links between Santería and related traditions in West Africa and the Americas, such as Haitian Vodou and Brazilian Candomblé. Since the late 20th century, some practitioners have emphasized a "Yorubization" process to remove Roman Catholic influences and created forms of Santería closer to traditional Yoruba religion.

Practitioners of Santería are primarily found in Cuba's La Habana and Matanzas provinces, although communities exist across the island and abroad, especially among the Cuban diasporas of Mexico and the United States. The religion remains most common among working-class Afro-Cuban communities although is also practiced by individuals of other class and ethnic backgrounds. The number of initiates is estimated to be in the high hundreds of thousands. These initiates serve as diviners and healers for a much larger range of adherents of varying levels of fidelity, making the precise numbers of those involved in Santería difficult to determine. Many of those involved also identify as practitioners of another religion, typically Roman Catholicism.

The term Santería translates into English as the 'way of the saints'.[1] This term was first used by scholarly commentators in the 1930s and later spread among the religion's practitioners themselves.[2] It has become the most popular name for the religion, although some practitioners find it offensive.[3] A common alternative is Regla de Ocha, meaning 'the rule of ocha',[4] ocha being a term for the religion's deities.[5] Some adherents regard this as the religion's "official" name.[3] The tradition has also been called Lucumí, in reference to the colonial Spanish term for the Yoruba people,[6] or alternatively La Religión Lucumí ('the Lucumí religion')[7] or Regla Lucumí ("the rule of Lucumí").[8]

Santería is an Afro-Caribbean religion,[9] and more specifically an Afro-Cuban religion.[10] In Cuba it is sometimes described as "the national religion",[11] although it has also spread abroad.[12] Santería's roots are in the traditional religions brought to Cuba by enslaved West Africans, the majority of them Yoruba, between the 16th and 19th centuries. In Cuba, these religions mixed with the Roman Catholicism introduced by Spanish colonialists.[13] Roman Catholic saints were conflated with West African deities,[14] while enslaved Africans adopted Roman Catholic rituals and sacramentals.[15] In the 19th century, elements from Spiritism—a French variant of Spiritualism—were drawn into the mix,[16] with Santería emerging as a distinct religion in western Cuba during the late 19th century.[17]

Although Santería is the best known of the Afro-Cuban religions,[18] and the most popular,[19] it is not the only one.[8] Others include Palo, which derives from practices originating in the Congo Basin, and Abakuá, which has its origins among the secret male societies practiced among the Efik-Ibibio.[20] Many practitioners of Palo and Abakuá also follow Santería.[21] Another Afro-Cuban religion is Arará, which derives from practices among the Ewe and Fon; although its origins are not Yoruba, it is sometimes considered a branch of Santería rather than a separate system.[22] Santería also has commonalities with other West African and West African-derived traditions in the Americas which collectively form the "Orisha religion",[23] "Orisha Tradition",[24] or "Orisha worship."[25][a] These include Haitian Vodou and Brazilian Candomblé, sometimes characterized as "sister religions" of Santería due to their shared origins in Yoruba traditional religion.[26]

> [Santería] in Cuba was not just a continuation of Yoruba religious and cultural practices but something new, born from the encounter of the diverse Yoruba tribes with one another, with non-Yoruba Africans, and with the Europeans in a new environment and a new social order governed by [a] set of institutions different from those of Africa.

Santería is a flexible and eclectic tradition,[28] with considerable variation in how it is practiced.[29] There is no strict orthodoxy,[30] no key sacred text,[31] and no central authority in control of the entire religion.[32] It has absorbed elements from many cultures that it has encountered,[33] such as that of the Chinese migrants who came to Cuba in the 19th century,[34] while in continental North America, Santería has also incorporated influences from Central American and Mexican religions as well as from New Age and modern Pagan practices.[35] As well as it being common for Cubans to idiosyncratically blend ideas from different religions,[36] many of Santería's practitioners claim multiple religious allegiances.[37] Santería's adherents often consider themselves to be Roman Catholics[38]—some priests and priestesses of Santería refuse to initiate anyone who is not a baptised Roman Catholic[39]—and others consider themselves to be Spiritists,[40] Hindus,[41] Vodouists,[42] or Jews.[43]

Terms for practitioners

Different vocabulary indicates the level of a practitioner's involvement,[44] with the various terms sometimes reflecting different political and social agendas.[45] Practitioners of both Santería and other Afro-Cuban religions are called creyentes ("believers").[46] Some people external to the religion have referred to its practitioners as "santerians" although this is not used by adherents themselves.[45] A non-initiate, including those who may attend public Santería ceremonies, is an aleyo ("stranger");[47] these non-initiates make up the majority of people involved in the religion.[48] Initiates are known as santero if male,[49] and santera if female,[50] although these two terms have sometimes been used for anyone, initiate or not, who participates in the religion.[45] Alternative terms for an initiate are babalocha or babaloricha ("father-deity") if male and an iyalocha or iyaloricha ("mother-deity") if female.[51] Those who have a sustained engagement with the religion are also referred to as omoricha ("children of the oricha"),[52] aboricha ("one who worships the oricha"),[44] and an oloricha ("one who belongs to the oricha").[44]

Beliefs

Olodumare and the oricha

Santería teaches the existence of an overarching divinity, known as Olodumare, Olofi, or Olorun.[53] Practitioners believe that this divinity created the universe but takes little interest in human affairs.[54] As this creator deity is inaccessible to humanity,[55] no major offerings are dedicated to it.[56] The three facets of this divinity are understood slightly differently; Olodumare represents the divine essence of all that exists, Olorun is regarded as the creator of all beings, while Olofi dwells in all creation.[57] In taking a triplicate form, this deity displays similarities with the Christian Trinity.[57]

The oricha

One of the most prominent oricha is Eleguá, who is represented by small cement heads kept in the home.
Santeria is polytheistic,[58] revolving around deities called oricha,[59] ocha,[60] or santos ("saints").[61] The term oricha can be both singular and plural, because Lucumí, the ritual language of Santería, lacks plural markers for nouns.[62] Practitioners believe that some oricha were created before humanity, while others were originally humans who became oricha through some remarkable quality.[63] Some practitioners perceive the oricha as facets of Olodumare,[64] and thus think that by venerating them they are ultimately worshipping the creator god.[65] Certain oricha are female, others male.[66] They are not regarded as wholly benevolent,[67] being capable of both harming and helping humans,[68] and displaying a mix of emotions, virtues, and vices.[69]

Origin myths and other stories about the oricha are called patakíes.[70] Each oricha is understood to "rule over" a particular aspect of the universe,[60] being identified with a different facet of the natural world or human existence.[71] They live in a realm called orún, which is contrasted with ayé, the realm of humanity.[72] Oricha each have their own caminos ("roads"),[73] or manifestations,[74] a concept akin to the Hindu concept of avatars.[75] The number of caminos an oricha has varies, with some having several hundred.[76] Practitioners believe that oricha can physically inhabit certain objects, among them stones and cowrie shells, which are deemed sacred.[77] Each oricha is also associated with specific songs, rhythms, colors, numbers, animals, and foodstuffs.[78]

Among the oricha are the four "warrior deities", or guerrors: Eleguá, Ogun, Ochosi, and Osun.[80] Eleguá is viewed as the guardian of the crossroads and thresholds;[81] he is the messenger between humanity and the oricha, and most ceremonies start by requesting his permission to continue.[82] He is depicted as being black on one side and red on the other,[83] and practitioners will frequently place a cement head decorated with cowrie shells that represents Eleguá behind their front door, guarding the threshold to the street.[84] The second guerro is Ogun, viewed as the oricha of weapons and war,[85] and also of iron and blacksmiths.[86] The third, Ochosi, is associated with woods and hunting,[87] while the fourth, Osun, is a protector who warns practitioners

when they are in danger.[88]

Perhaps the most popular oricha,[89] Changó or Shango is associated with lightning and fire.[90] Another prominent oricha is Yemaja, the deity associated with maternity, fertility, and the sea.[91] Ochún is the oricha of rivers and of romantic love,[92] while Oyá is a warrior associated with wind, lightning, and death, and is viewed as the guardian of the cemetery.[93] Obatalá is the oricha of truth and justice and is deemed responsible for helping to mould humanity.[94] Babalú Ayé is the oricha associated with disease and its curing,[95] while Osain is linked to herbs and healing.[96] Orula is the oricha of divination, who in Santería's mythology was present at the creation of humanity and thus is aware of everyone's destiny.[97] Ibeyi takes the form of twins who protect children.[96] Olokún is the patron oricha of markets, while his wife Olosá is associated with lagoons.[96] Agagyú is the oricha of volcanoes and the wasteland.[96] Some oricha are deemed antagonistic to others; Changó and Ogun are for instance enemies.[98]

Although in Santería the term santo is regarded as a synonym of oricha and is not a literal reference to Christian saints,[99] the oricha are often conflated with one or more Roman Catholic saints based on similar attributes.[100] For instance, the Holy Infant of Atocha, a depiction of Christ as a child, is conflated with Eleguá, who is seen as having a childlike nature.[101] Babalú Ayé, who is associated with disease, is often identified with the Catholic Saint Lazarus, who rose from the dead,[79] while Changó is conflated with Santa Barbara because they both wear red.[102] Cuba's patron saint, Our Lady of Charity, is equated with Ochún.[103] It has been argued that Yoruba slaves initially linked their traditional deities with Christian saints as a means of concealing their continued worship of the former from the Spanish authorities,[104] or as a means of facilitating social mobility by assimilating into Roman Catholic social norms.[105]

Relationships with the oricha

Santería's focus is on cultivating a reciprocal relationship with the oricha,[60] with adherents believing that these deities can intercede in human affairs and help people if they are appeased.[63] Practitioners argue that each person is "born to" a particular oricha, whether or not they devote themselves to that deity.[106] This is a connection that, adherents believe, has been set before birth.[107] Practitioners refer to this oricha as one that "rules the head" of an individual;[60] it is their "owner of the head".[108] If the oricha is male then it is described as the individual's "father"; if the oricha is female then it is the person's "mother".[109] This oricha is deemed to influence the individual's personality, and can be recognised through examining the person's personality traits,[110] or through divination.[111]

To gain the protection of a particular oricha, practitioners are encouraged to make offerings to them, sponsor ceremonies in their honor, and live in accordance with their wishes, as determined through divination.[112] Practitioners are concerned at the prospect of offending the oricha.[113] Creyentes believe that the oricha can communicate with humans through divination, prayers, dreams, music, and dance.[114] Many practitioners also describe how they "read" messages from the oricha in everyday interactions and events.[115] For instance, a practitioner who meets a child at a traffic intersection may interpret this as a message from Eleguá, who is often depicted as a child and who is perceived as the "guardian" of the crossroads. At that point the practitioner may turn to divination to determine the precise meaning of the encounter. The information obtained from these messages may then help practitioners make decisions about their life.[116]

Birth and the dead

A Santería shrine in Trinidad, Cuba

Santería teaches that the human head contains a person's essence, their eledá[117] or orí.[118] It maintains that before birth, the eledá goes before Olodumare, where it is given its essential character,[118] and forms a link with the oricha who becomes "the owner of the head".[119] The concept of the eledá derives from Yoruba traditional religion, where it is seen as a person's "spiritual double". In Santería, this concept idea has syncretised with Roman Catholic beliefs about guardian angels and Spiritist notions of the protecciones or protector spirits. There is no strict orthodoxy on this issue and thus interpretations differ.[120] Practitioners often believe that everyone has a specific destiny,[121] their destino (destiny) or camino (road),[122] although their fate is not completely predetermined.[122]

Ancestor veneration is important in Santería.[123] The religion entails propitiating the spirits of the dead, known as egun,[124] espíritus,[125] or muertos.[126] Practitioners believe that the dead must be treated with respect, awe, and kindness; they are consulted at all ceremonies.[127] Although the dead are not deemed as powerful as the oricha, they are still thought capable of assisting the living,[127] with whom they can communicate through dreams, intuition, and spirit possession.[122] Santería teaches that a person can learn to both see and communicate with the dead.[127] Practitioners will often provide offerings, typically seven glasses of water, to the egun to placate and please them.[127] Especially propitiated are those egun regarded as ancestors;[60] these ancestors can include both hereditary forebears or past members of one's congregation,[128] with practitioners believing that a creyente becomes an ancestor when they die.[129]

Adherents believe that everyone has a cuadro espiritual ("spiritual portrait" or "spiritual picture") of egun who protect them.[130] Individuals can have as many as 25 protectores, or protective spirits.[107] The religion maintains that all people have multiple egun accompanying them at all times, and that these can be benevolent, malevolent, or a mix of both.[127] Practitioners also believe that the number and identities of these spirits can be determined through divination.[127] It draws a distinction between evolved spirits, who can help those they are attached to, and unevolved spirits, who lack the wisdom and skill to be useful and instead cause havoc.[131] Santería teaches that through offerings and prayers, individuals can help some of their unevolved spirits to become evolved.[131] Santería also divides the spirits into categories that each exhibit different traits, reflecting stereotypes about different social groups,[122] with such spirits often portrayed as African, Haitian, Gypsy, Arab, or Plains Indian.[132] The gitano (gypsy) spirits for instance are believed capable of foreseeing impending troubles and diagnosing illnesses while the congo spirits of Africa are perceived as strong-willed, powerful, and adept at guiding people through hostile circumstances.[122]

Aché

Aché is a major cosmological concept in Yoruba traditional religion and has been transferred to Santería.[133] Aché is regarded as the organizing power of the cosmos;[134] the Hispanic studies scholars Margarite Fernández Olmos and Lizabeth Paravisini-Gebert referred to it as "a spiritual-mystical energy or power found in varying degrees and in many forms throughout the universe".[63] The medical anthropologist Johan Wedel described it as "life force"[135] or "divine force",[136] while the folklorist Michael Atwood Mason called aché the "ritual generative power".[65] The ethnomusicologist Katherine Hagedorn described aché as "the realized and inherent divine potential in all aspects of life, even in apparently inert objects."[133] She added that "Aché is neither good nor bad; rather, aché is motion".[129]

While deeming Olodumare the ultimate embodiment of aché,[137] practitioners believe that aché permeates all life,[63] and is present in both the visible and invisible world.[138] It is nevertheless deemed to sometimes congregate more densely, for instance in the forces of nature, specific locales, and in certain human individuals;[138] initiates are believed to attract more of it than other humans.[133] Santería holds that aché can emanate from the human body via speech, song, dance, and drumming,[139] and can be transmitted through such acts as singing praise songs for the oricha or sacrificing an animal.[140] Among practitioners, aché is sometimes described as conveying notions of luck, health, and prosperity,[136] and has the power to fortify a person's health.[141]

Morality, ethics, and gender roles

Santería has standards for behavior expected of practitioners,[142] encouraging behaviors influenced by the mythological stories about the oricha.[143] The religion presents strict rules regarding how to interact with other people and with the supernatural,[144] for instance placing emphasis on respect for elders and superiors.[145] A general attitude in Santería is that if an individual maintains good character, the oricha will aid them.[146] Practitioners generally take socially conservative stances, having high regard for traditional family structures, marriage, fidelity, and child-rearing;[147] adherents in the United States often adopt more progressive stances on issues surrounding gender and sexuality than their counterparts in Cuba.[148]

The religion is non-dualistic and does not view the universe as being divided between good and evil; rather, all things are perceived as being complementary and relative.[149] Several academics have described Santería as having a "here-and-now" ethos distinct from that of Christianity,[150] and the social scientist Mercedes C. Sandoval suggested that many Cubans chose Santería over Roman Catholicism or Spiritism because it emphasizes techniques for dealing with pragmatic problems in life.[151] In the U.S., some African American adherents have contrasted what they regard as the African-derived ethos of Santería with the non-African origins of Christianity,[152] thus adopting it as a religion readily combined with black nationalism.[153]

The scholar of religion Mary Ann Clark labelled Santería a "female oriented and female normative" religion,[154] arguing that all of its practitioners are expected to take on "female gender roles" during its rituals.[155] Women can hold the highest leadership positions,[156] although restrictions are placed on them while menstruating.[157] Similar restrictions are also placed on homosexual males, traditionally prohibiting them from taking part in certain forms of divination and ritual drumming.[158] Many gay men and lesbians are nevertheless santeros or santeras,[159] with Yemaja being seen as the patron of gay and bisexual men.[160] A stereotype exists that all male Santería priests are homosexual,[41] and members of other Afro-Cuban traditions with a more masculinist orientation, such as Palo, have often denigrated it for being dominated by women and men they consider to be "womanly".[161]

Practices

Santería is a practice-oriented religion; ritual correctness is considered more important than belief.[162] It has an elaborate system of ritual,[163] with its rites termed ceremonias (ceremonies).[164] Most of its activities revolve around the oricha,[138] focusing on solving the problems of everyday life.[146] Practitioners usually use the term trabajo (work) in reference to ritual activity;[165] thus "working ocha" describes its rites.[166]

Santería is an initiatory religion,[167] one which is organized around a structured hierarchy.[168] An ethos of secrecy pervades many of its practices,[169] with initiates often refusing to discuss certain topics with non-initiates.[170] For this reason, Mason described Santería as a secret society.[171] For ritual purposes, the Lucumí language is often used.[172] Sometimes referred to as la lengua de los orichas ("the language of the oricha"),[173] it is regarded as a divine language through which practitioners can contact the deities.[174] Although some practitioners are uncomfortable using it,[175] most initiates know tens or hundreds of Lucumí words and phrases.[173] Most Cubans do not understand the Lucumí language, barring a few words that have filtered into Cuban Spanish.[176] Lucumí derives from the Yoruba language, although it has become "increasingly fragmented and unintelligible" since the 19th century.[177] As Yoruba transitioned into Lucumí, the Yoruba pronunciations of many words were forgotten,[175] and in the early 21st century some practitioners have studied the Yoruba language to better understand the original meaning of Lucumí words.[178]

Houses of worship

Rituals take place in the ilé ("house"),[179] sometimes called the ilé-oricha ("house of the oricha"),[180] casa templo ("house of worship"),[181] casa de santos ("house of saints"),[182] or casa de religión ("house of religion").[183] The ethnomusicologist María Teresa Vélez called this the "house-temple",[180] with the ilé usually being the personal home of a santero or santera.[166] It will typically have an inner room, the igbodu ("sacred grove of the festival"), where the most important rituals take place.[184] There will also be an eyá aránla or sala, often a living room, where semi-private rites can be conducted.[184] Another space, the iban balo, or patio, will be used for public occasions, as well as for the cultivation of plants and the housing of animals due to be sacrificed.[184] The ilé will typically include a place to store ritual paraphernalia, kitchen facilities, and space for visitors to sleep.[166]

The ilé refers not only to the building where ceremonies take place, but also the community of practitioners who meet there.[166] In this sense, many ilés trace a lineage back to the 19th century, with some santeros and santeras capable of listing the practitioners who have been initiated into it.[166] In some ceremonies, the names of these individuals, who are regarded as the ancestors of the house, are recited in chronological order.[185] Although members of different houses often interact, each ilé is largely autonomous, allowing for variation in their practices.[186] In Cuba, it is common for Santería practitioners to meet with each other regularly,[187] and to regard each other as being akin to a family:[188] the familia de santo.[189] Conversely, in an area like Veracruz in Mexico, many practitioners attend group rituals and then leave, sometimes never seeing their co-practitioners again.[187]

Most ilés are established by a santero or santera who has attracted a following.[190] An apprentice is known as their ahijado (godson) or ahijada (goddaughter).[191] They refer to their santero/santera as padrino (godfather) or madrina (godmother).[192] The relationship between santeros/santeras and their "godchildren" is central to the religion's social organization,[190] and practitioners believe that the more "godchildren" a santera or santero has, the greater their aché.[136] The "godchildren" are expected to contribute both their labor and finances to events held at the ilé and in return the santero/santera provides assistance for their needs.[190] Within the religion, offending one's godparent is regarded as also offending the oricha that "rules the head".[115] Practitioners express respect both to their godparent and the oricha via a ritual prostration, the moforibale, in which they bow their head to the floor.[193] The precise form of the moforibale differs depending on whether the individual's personal oricha is male or female.[194]

Shrines

Altars or shrines to the oricha are typically found both within the igbodu[196] and in practitioners' homes.[197] Central to these altars are sacred objects, termed fundamentos ("fundamentals"),[198] which are contained within porcelain vessels, often tureens, called sopera.[199] The most important of the fundamentos are stones termed otanes (sing. otán),[199] which are regarded as the literal and symbolic representation of the oricha,[200] and thus living entities.[201] They are deemed to be sources of aché,[202] with older otanes having more aché than younger ones.[203]

Practitioners will collect stones from the landscape and then use divination to determine which ones contain an oricha and, if so, which oricha it is.[204] Specific otanes sometimes display traits linking them to particular oricha; for example ocean stones are linked with Yemaya, river pebbles with Ochún, and meteorite fragments with Changó.[57] Each oricha is deemed to prefer a particular color and number of otanes in sopera devoted to them; Changó has six or ten black stones, Obatala has eight white stones, while Ochún favors five yellow stones.[205] New otanes undergo a bautismo ("baptism") rite,[202] entailing them being washed in osain, a mixture of herbs and water, and then "fed" with animal blood.[203] When an initiate receives their stones, they take an oath to protect them and feed them at least annually.[202]

Other material placed inside the sopera includes cowrie shells; usually 18 are added although the precise number differs depending on which oricha the sopera is devoted to.[203] The sopera will often be covered by a cloth known as a pañuelo that is colored in accordance with the oricha in question.[206] Often laid over the sopera are necklaces known as collares, again representing a particular oricha.[207] On the altar, the sopera will be arranged in a descending hierarchy depending on which oricha each is dedicated to, with that of Obatala at the top.[208]

Many altars contain few or no anthropomorphic depictions of the oricha,[209] although will often include objects associated with them;[197] a wooden axe for Changó or a fan for Ochún, for instance.[206] Creating these altars is deemed expensive and time-consuming.[206] Material may be selected based on the tastes of the adherent; anthropologists have observed practitioners who have included Taoist figurines[210] or statues of wizards,[211] on their altars. Food and flowers are often placed on the altar as offerings.[212] Although rarely included on their altars, practitioners will often have statues of Roman Catholic saints elsewhere in their homes.[211]

In addition to their altar to the oricha, many practitioners have altars set aside for the spirits of the dead.[213] These typically consist of a white-covered table known as a bóveda,[214] something derived from the White Table of Spiritism.[215] Bóveda often feature photographs of deceased relatives, to whom offerings are given;[216] popular offerings for the spirits of the dead include seven glasses of water,[127] a cafecito coffee,[217] and the aguardiente liquor.[218] Alternatively, many practitioners of Santería—like those who follow Palo—will have a rinconcito ("little corner"), a small area in which they collect together assorted objects, often those typically found in a household, as a material manifestation of the dead. Offerings to the dead may be placed here.[219] Many practitioners will also enshrine their family ancestors under the bathroom sink. This location is chosen so that the ancestors can travel between the realms of the living and the dead via the water in the pipes.[215]

Offerings and animal sacrifice

Offerings are called ebbó[220] (or ebó),[221] and are given to the oricha, ancestral spirits, to a person's own ori, and sometimes to the earth.[222] These offerings can consist of fruit and other foodstuffs, liquor, flowers, candles, money, or slaughtered animals.[223] Divination is often used to determine the exact nature of the offering;[224] initiates are supposed to provide offerings on a regular basis, and at least once a year.[225] Given to strengthen the supernatural forces, to thank them, or as a supplication,[226] they help form a reciprocal relationship with these entities in the hope of receiving something in return.[227] If this fails to materialise, practitioners may resort to several explanations: that the details of the ritual were incorrect, that the priest or priestess carrying out the rite lacked sufficient aché, or that the wrong ebbó was provided for the situation.[228]

Animal sacrifice is called matanza,[229] or sometimes ebó eyé,[230] with the person carrying it out termed the matador.[231] This is usually a man,[232] with menstruating women prohibited from involvement.[136] Birds—including guinea fowl, chickens, and doves—are commonly sacrificed, usually by having their throats slit or their heads twisted and ripped off.[233] For rituals of greater importance, sacrifices are often of four-legged animals.[76] Some practitioners describe the killing of animals as an acceptable substitute to human sacrifice,[234] and in Cuba there have been persistent rumours of children being sacrificed in Santería rites.[235] The oricha and egun are believed to "eat" the blood of the victim;[236] the latter's lifeforce is deemed to transfer to the oricha, thus strengthening its aché.[237] An animal that struggles to avoid being killed is sometimes understood as having particular strength which will then pass to the oricha.[237]

Once killed, the animals' severed heads may be placed on top of the sopera belonging to the oricha to which the sacrifice has been directed.[238] After the carcass has been butchered, some of the organs—known as acheses—may be cooked and offered to the oricha;[239] other parts will be eaten by practitioners.[240] Some of the blood may be collected and added to omiero, an infusion of herbs and water.[231] Believed to contain much aché,[241] this liquid is used for removing malevolent influences and in ceremonies for baptising ritual tools.[231] Santería's animal sacrifice has been a cause of concern for many non-practitioners.[242] It has sometimes brought adherents into confrontation with the law,[243] as with the 1993 case of Church of the Lukumi Babalu Aye v. City of Hialeah, in which the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that animal cruelty laws targeted specifically at Santería were unconstitutional.[244] initiation process[245]

Initiation is known as kariocha,[246] "making ocha",[247] or "making santo".[248] A charge is levied for initiation;[249] this varies depending on the client, but is often equivalent to a year's wage.[250] Each initiation varies in its details, which are often concealed from non-initiates.[251] The initiate is known as an iyabó[252] or iyawó,[253] a term meaning both "slave of the oricha" and "bride of the oricha".[254] As well as the santero or santera overseeing the initiation ceremony, the event may be attended by an oyubona or oyugbona ("one who witnesses"), who acts as a secondary godparent to the new initiate.[255]

The initiation process takes seven days,[256] plus two days of preparatory rituals.[257] During this preparation, a misa espiritual ("spiritual mass") will typically take place to gain the blessings of the ancestral egun, and an ebó de entrada ("opening sacrifice") will be made to the oricha or the egun.[258] Next comes the ceremonia del río ("ceremony of the initiate"), in which offerings are given to Ochún,[259] and the rompimiento ("breaking"), in which the oyubona takes the initiate to purify themselves in a river.[260] The rest of the initiation takes place in the igbodu,[261] where the initiate sleeps upon a mat on the floor for the seven days.[262] No one uninvolved in the initiation is permitted entry.[263] The initiate is given their own otanes,[264] as well as objects representing the warrior oricha.[265] They are also given beaded necklaces, known as collares[266] or elekes[267] (ilekes).[268] Each necklace is a different color associated with a specific deity.[269] During the prendición ("pinning") ritual, a heavy necklace known as the collar de mazo is placed on the initiate.[270] During the lavatorio ("washing"),[271] the initiate's head is bathed in omiero,[272] designed to rid them of any malevolent spirits attached to them.[76] Often, their hair will be shaved off.[273]

On the día del itá ("day of history"),[274] usually the third day, the initiate will undergo the itá, a session with a diviner.[275] The diviner will reveal the initiate's Lucumí ritual name,[276] a praise name of the oricha that rules their head.[264] This name often incorporates elements indicating the initiate's tutelary oricha; devotees of Yemajá for instance usually include omí ("water"), while those of Changó often have obá ("king").[277] Next comes the asiento ("seating"),[48] or coronación ("coronation"),[278] which marks the point when the aché of the tutelary oricha is believed to literally enter the initiate's cranium.[107] The otanes of several oricha are placed to the initiate's head, culminating in those of their tutelary oricha.[279] An animal sacrifice usually follows, involving at least five four-legged animals and 25 birds.[280] The following day is el Día del Medio ("the middle day"), when guests—including the initiate's family and friends—pay homage to them.[281] It includes drumming and a feast.[281] On the seventh day of the initiation, the new initiate leaves the ilé and visits the marketplace, where they make offerings to Eleguá and steal something small, also as an offering to Eleguá.[282]

The initiate can finally take their otanes home.[283] They may then undergo a year-long period, the iyaworaje ("journey of the iyawo"), during which they must observe certain restrictions, the nature of which depends on their tutelary oricha.[284] This may for instance include abstaining from sexual intercourse, wearing only white, or not cutting their hair.[285] The iyaworaje ends with the ebó del año ceremony.[286] Once this is done, they may lead rituals and help initiate others.[287] Thenceforth, they will celebrate the annual anniversary of their initiation, their cumpleaños de santo ("birthday in the saint").[288] Although a largely orally-transmitted tradition,[289] santeros and santeras often emphasise teaching in a non-verbal manner, encouraging their initiates to learn through taking part in the ritual activities.[290] Since at least the 20th century, some initiates have kept libretas, notebooks in which they have written down material relevant to the practice of Santería.[291] These may be shared with their own initiates or kept private.[292]

Toque de santo

Several types of batá drum, which are used in the toque de santo ritual
Santería's main public ritual is a drumming ceremony called the toque de santo,[293] or tambor.[294] Lasting for up to several hours,[295] this is usually seen as an offering to the oricha, performed to gain their favor.[114] The goal of the rhythms and songs is to summon the oricha to earth,[296] at which point they can possess one of the participants.[297] It is believed that the collective energy built up by the group is necessary in achieving this.[298] In turn, the oricha are believed capable of soothing the grieving, healing the sick, blessing the deserving, and rebuking those who have behaved badly.[114]

The toque de santo uses double-headed drums called batá;[299] these are deemed sacred,[300] and are sometimes regarded as the central symbol of Santería.[301] There are multiple types of batá: the iyá is the largest, the itótele is smaller, and the okónkolo is the smallest.[302] For ceremonial purposes, these drums must be wooden; adding metal elements could offend Changó, who is associated with wooden artefacts, because of their links with his enemy, Ogun.[303] They may however have brass bells associated with Ochún, known as chaworo, affixed to their rim.[304] Each ceremonial drum has to be "born" from an existing example, the latter constituting its "godfather," and in this way they form lineages.[305] Before being used in ceremonies, these drums are baptized, after which they are referred to as a tambor de fundamento.[306] This baptism entails washing the drums in omiero, making sacrifices to Osain, and affixing an afoubo, a small leather bag containing items including a parrot feather and glass beads, to the interior of the drum.[307]

Practitioners believe that the consecrated batá contain a substance called añá,[308] itself an avatar of Ochún,[304] and a manifestation of aché.[309] Many drummers avoid mentioning the añá in public and may not refer to it by name.[304] Drums which have not been baptised are not viewed as containing añá, and are called tambores judíos ("Jewish drums").[310] Particular rhythms played on the drums may be associated with a specific oricha,[311] a group of oricha, or all of the oricha.[312] Those playing the batá are called batáleros,[313] and have their own hierarchy separate from that of the priesthood.[314] Santería drumming is male dominated;[315] women are discouraged or banned from playing the batá during ceremonies,[316] although by the 1990s some women practitioners in the U.S. had taken on the role.[317] Practitioners explain the taboo with the view that menstrual blood can weaken the drum's añá,[318] or that the drum's desire for blood would drain the woman, causing her harm,[319] or in some cases infertility.[320]

Praise songs are sung for the oricha,[321] with specific songs associated with particular deities.[322] These may be sung a cappella or with instrumental accompaniment.[323] The lead singer at such ceremonies is known as an akpwón.[324] During the opening verse of the song, the akpwón may break into a personal prayer.[325] The akpwón can switch from song to song quickly, with the drummers having to adapt their rhythm accordingly.[133] A chorus of singers will respond to the akpwón, often while swaying back and forth.[326] These choral responses may split into a two or three-part harmony.[325] Dancing also takes place, with each oricha associated with a particular dance style.[322] The dances at the toque de santo are believed to generate aché, strengthening the link between the realms of the oricha and humanity.[298] Dancing either alone or first in front of the drums at the toque de santo is considered a privilege and is usually reserved for the most experienced initiate present.[327] There are specific rules of engagement that are laid out for taking part in the toque de santo;[114] dancing poorly at the ritual is considered an insult to the oricha.[298]

Possession

Possession is important in Santería,[328] and the purpose of the toque de santo is to call down an oricha to possess one of the participants.[297] The possessed individual is referred to as the "horse", with the oricha having "mounted" them.[329] According to practitioners, becoming possessed by an oricha requires an individual giving up their consciousness to the deity,[330] and accordingly they often claim no memory of the events that occurred during the possession.[331] Some have stated that reaching the mental state whereby an individual can become possessed takes much practice.[330] The onset of the trance is marked by body spasms, termed arullarse.[332]

Once an individual is possessed, they may be taken into an adjacent room where they are dressed in the ritual clothing pertaining to the possessing oricha, after which they are returned to the main room.[333] As well as speaking in the Lucumí language,[334] those possessed may then display gestures associated with a particular oricha;[335] for instance, those believing themselves possessed by Ochún may wipe their skirt over other people, representing the waves of the ocean, while those regarding themselves as being possessed by Eleguá may steal from assembled participants.[336] The possessed individual will then provide healing or dispense advice;[331] sometimes a possessed person will reprimand others present, for instance for failing to carry out their ritual obligations, or issue them a warning.[152] Some practitioners have also reported becoming possessed by an oricha in non-ritual contexts, such as while sleeping or walking through the streets,[334] or during drumming performances carried out for non-religious purposes.[337]

Healing and amuletic practices

Healing is important in Santería,[338] and health problems are the most common reason why people approach a santero or santera for help.[339] When operating as healers, practitioners are sometimes termed curanderos,[340] or osainistas.[341] Particular focuses of Santería healing include skin complaints, gastrointestinal and respiratory problems, sexually transmitted infections, and issues of female reproduction; some practitioners provide concoctions to induce abortion.[342] Santería healers will typically use divination to determine the cause of an ailment before prescribing treatment.[343]

Santería teaches that supernatural factors cause or exacerbate ailments.[344] It claims that oricha may make someone sick, either as punishment or to encourage them to make a change in their life, often to become an initiate. The oricha must then be propitiated to stop, sometimes with the sick individual receiving initiation.[345] Santería also holds that a spirit of the dead may attach itself to an individual and thus harm them.[346] Adherents also often believe that humans can harm one another through supernatural means, either involuntarily, by giving them the mal de ojo (evil eye),[347] or deliberately, through brujería (witchcraft).[348] The latter are often perceived as acting out of envy,[349] utilising cursing techniques from Palo,[350] for which they have employed material, such as hair or nail clippings, taken from their victim.[351]

Herbalism is a major component of Santería healing practices,[352] with healing plants, termed egwe, having an important role in the religion.[353] Practitioners believe that each species of plant has its own aché which holds healing power; medicinal plants are deemed more powerful if harvested from the wild rather than being cultivated, for the latter can lack aché.[141] Adherents often believe that different types of plant have different temperaments and personalities; some are shy or easily frightened and thus need to be approached with the appropriate etiquette.[141]

To heal a patient, the santero/santera may also prescribe omiero,[352] give them a cleansing bath,[354] or provide them with a collares necklace.[355] They may perform a ritual to transfer the sickness to an animal,[351] sacrifice an animal to a specific oricha to request healing,[356] or encourage an oricha to possess the sick individual and thus heal them.[357] Different oricha are linked to the healing of specific ailments; Ochún is for instance usually requested when dealing with genital problems.[151] People who are sick may undergo the rogación de la cabeza ("blessing of the head"), in which coconut water and cotton are applied to the head to feed the orí.[358] Many practitioners will also encourage their clients to seek mainstream medical assistance, either from doctors or psychotherapists, with Santería healing seen as complementary to medical science.[359]

Santería features protective talismans known as resguardos.[360] These are created using herbs and blood and produced while in contact with the otanes.[231] Resguardos are often given to small children, who are deemed particularly vulnerable to sorcery.[361] Charms and amulets are also used as a general prophylaxis against illness; one example are ears of corn that are wrapped in purple ribbon and placed behind a doorway.[362] Other rituals are designed to protect against sorcery, as for instance with the scattering of petals of the gálan de día in the house or the placement of okra by the door.[362] In Cuba, protective rituals from Santería have often been invoked in hospitals to prevent the cambio de vida ("life switch"), a practice by which the ailments of a sick person are believed to be transferred to another individual, often without the latter's knowledge.[363]

Divination

Divination is a central aspect of Santería,[364] taking place before all major rites and being utilized by adherents at critical moments of their life.[215] Three main divinatory techniques are employed: obi, dilogún, and Ifá.[365] Highly skilled diviners are known as an oríate[366] or italero/italera (male and female),[367] and sometimes work in this role fulltime.[368]

Clients approach these diviners for a divinatory consulta (consultation),[369] usually to ask for advice about their health, family problems, or legal issues,[370] and in doing so will pay the diviner a fee, the derecho.[371] Attending a divination ritual in this way is commonly the first time that an individual encounters Santería so directly.[372] During the session, offerings will be given to an overseeing oricha; the diviner will then cast small objects onto a board or table and interpret the way in which they fall.[373] The diviner asks the client questions and seeks to answer them by making multiple throws.[374] The diviner will ultimately determine which oricha will assist the client in dealing with their problems and outline what sacrifices will be appropriate to secure the aid of said oricha.[375]

Obi, also known as biagué, involves the casting of four pieces of a dried coconut shell, with the manner in which they fall being used to answer a question.[376] Any practitioner can utilise this technique,[215] which is also used in Palo.[376] Dilogún entails the casting of cowrie shells,[377] and is considered more complex in that it requires a knowledge of the patakie stories.[376] Dilogún typically involves a set of 21 cowrie shells, filed flat on their round side; these are fed with both omiero and blood.[378] Like obi, dilogún is generally seen as being open to all practitioners of Santería,[215] although some groups reserve it for postmenopausal women.[158]

Ifá is the most complex and prestigious divinatory system used in the religion.[215] It typically involves the casting of consecrated palm nuts to answer a question, with the nuts offering 256 possible configurations.[379] Although Ifá also has a separate existence from Santería,[380] the two are closely linked, sharing the same mythology and conception of the universe;[18] the oricha of Ifá, Orula or Ọ̀rúnmila, has a prominent place within Santería.[380] High priests of Ifá are known as babalawos and although their presence is not essential to Santería ceremonies, they often attend in their capacity as diviners.[381] Many santeros are also babalawos,[382] although it is not uncommon for babalawos to perceive themselves as being superior to most santeros.[383] Unlike the more open policy for Santería initiates, only heterosexual men are traditionally allowed to become babalawos,[384] although some babalawos are gay men,[158] and since the 21st century a small number of women have also been initiated.[385]

Funerals and mediumship

Funeral rites, called itutu, are designed to appease the soul of the deceased.[386] As part of this, a funeral mass is held in a Roman Catholic church nine days after the individual has died to ensure that their soul successfully travels to the realm of the spirits.[387] A year of additional rites for the dead individual follow, a period ended with the levantamiento de platos, the breaking of a dish, to symbolise the deceased's final departure from the realm of the living.[386]

As well as having been influenced by Spiritism,[388] Santería is often intertwined with Espiritismo, a Puerto Rican tradition focused on contacting the dead;[389] this is particularly the case in areas such as New York and New Jersey.[390] Sometimes the word "Santerismo" is used to refer to a blend between the two traditions.[391] Various santeros or santeras are believed capable of communicating with spirits;[392] seances conducted for this purpose are called misas espirituales ("spiritual masses") and are led by mortevas ("deaders") who are usually women.[393] During these rituals, the medium may be possessed by a spirit of the dead, who then engages in healing practices or offers advice and warnings to those assembled.[394] Adopted from Espiritismo, they are often included in initiation and funerary rites.[120] An additional ritual found in Santería is the tambor para egún, a drum ceremony for the spirits of the dead.[395]

Some practitioners whose approach to Santería is influenced by Espiritismo also create cloth dolls for deceased family members and spirit guides.[396] The spirit is believed to enter and inhabit the doll,[397] with some practitioners stating that they can see the inhabiting spirit.[398] Sometimes the doll's clothing is changed to please the spirit,[397] while offerings, such as glasses of water or fruit, are placed before them.[399] These spirit dolls may also be passed down through the generations within a family.[400]

Background

After the Spanish Empire conquered Cuba, the island's Arawak and Ciboney populations dramatically declined.[401] To provide a new labor source for the sugar, tobacco, and coffee plantations they had established on Cuba, the Spanish then turned to buying slaves sold at West African ports.[402] Slavery was widespread in West Africa; most slaves were prisoners of war captured in conflicts with neighbouring groups, although some were convicted criminals.[403] The first enslaved Africans arrived in Cuba in 1511,[404] although the largest numbers came in the 19th century.[405] Cuba continued to receive new slaves until at least 1860,[404] with full emancipation occurring in 1886.[406] In total, between 702,000 and 1 million enslaved Africans were brought to Cuba.[407] Most came from a stretch of Western Africa between the modern nation-states of Guinea and Angola.[408] The great plurality were Yoruba, from the area encompassed by modern Nigeria and Benin;[409] the Yoruba had a shared language and culture but were divided among different states.[410] They largely adhered to Yoruba traditional religion,[411] which incorporated many local orisha cults although with certain orisha worshipped widely due to the extent of the Yoruba-led Oyo Empire.[412]

In Cuba, slaves were divided into groups termed naciones (nations), often based on their port of embarkation rather than their own ethno-cultural background;[413] those who were Yoruba speakers, as well as Arara and Ibo people, were identified as the "Lucumí nation".[414] Enslaved West Africans brought their traditional religions with them to Cuba;[65] some were from the priestly class and possessed knowledge of traditions such as Ifá.[411] While hundreds of orisha were worshipped across West Africa, fewer than twenty became prominent in Santería, perhaps because many kin-based orisha cults were lost when traditional kinship networks were destroyed through enslavement.[415] Orisha associated with agriculture were abandoned, probably because slaves had little reason to protect the harvests of slave-owners.[416] Many myths associated with the oricha were transformed, creating kinship relationships between different oricha which were not present in West African mythologies.[143] As Santería formed, separate West African orisha cults were reconstituted into a single religious system,[417] one which had a newly standardized pantheon of oricha.[418]

In Spanish Cuba, Roman Catholicism was the only religion that could be practiced legally.[419] Cuba's Roman Catholic Church made efforts to convert the enslaved Africans, but the instruction in Roman Catholicism provided to the latter was typically perfunctory and sporadic.[413] In Cuba, traditional African deities perhaps continued to be venerated within clubs and fraternal organizations made up of African migrants and their descendants.[420] The most important of these were the cabildos de nación, associations that the establishment regarded as a means of controlling the Afro-Cuban population.[421] These operated as mutual aid societies and organized communal feasts, dances, and carnivals.[422] The Catholic Church saw these groups as a method for gradual evangelisation, through which they tolerated the practice of some African customs while stamping out those they most fiercely objected to.[423] It is probable that in these groups, priests of different West African orisha interacted and began to develop a new system.[424] In the late 18th and early 19th century new laws restricted the cabildos' activities,[425] although their membership expanded in the 19th century.[426] The final decades of the 19th century also saw a growing interest in Spiritism, a religion based on the ideas of the French writer Allan Kardec, which in Cuba proved particularly popular among the white peasantry, the Creole class, and the small urban middle class.[427] Ideas from Spiritism increasingly filtered into and influenced Santería.[428]

Formation and early history

The earliest casas teaching Santería emerged in urban parts of western Cuba during the late 19th century.[17] As a trained priesthood emerged, they ensured a level of standardisation among new initiates.[424] Although it drew on older West African cults, Santeria was, as described by Clark, "a new religious system".[429] Urban-to-rural migration then spread Santería elsewhere in Cuba,[430] and in the 1930s it probably arrived in Cuba's second largest city, Santiago de Cuba, which lies at the eastern end of the island.[431]

Following the Cuban War of Independence, the island became an independent republic in 1898. In the republic, Afro-Cubans remained largely excluded from economic and political power,[432] and negative stereotypes about them remained pervasive throughout the Euro-Cuban population.[433] Afro-Cuban religious practices were often referred to as brujería (witchcraft) and thought to be connected to criminality.[434] Although the republic's new constitution enshrined freedom of religion and Santería was never legislated against, throughout the first half of the 20th century various campaigns were launched against it.[435] These were often encouraged by the press, who promoted allegations that white children were being abducted and murdered in Santería rituals;[436] this reached a fever pitch in 1904 after two white children were murdered in Havana in cases that investigators speculated were linked to brujería.[437]

One of the first intellectuals to examine Santería was the lawyer and ethnographer Fernando Ortiz, who discussed it in his 1906 book Los negros brujos (The Black Witchdoctors).[438] He saw it as a barrier to the social integration of Afro-Cubans into broader Cuban society and recommended its suppression.[439] In the 1920s, there were efforts to incorporate elements of Afro-Cuban culture into a wider understanding of Cuban culture, such as through the Afrocubanismo literary and artistic movement. These often drew upon Afro-Cuban music, dance, and mythology, but typically rejected Santería rituals themselves.[440] In 1942, Rómula Lachatañeré's Manuel de santería was published, representing the first scholarly attempt to understand Santería as a religion;[441] in contrast to Ortiz, he maintained that the tradition should be seen as a religious system as opposed to a form of witchcraft.[442] Lachatañeré was instrumental in promoting the term Santería in reference to the phenomenon, deeming it a more neutral description than the pejorative-laden terms such as brujería then in common use.[443]

After the Cuban Revolution

The Cuban Revolution of 1959 resulted in the island becoming a Marxist-Leninist state governed by Fidel Castro's Communist Party of Cuba.[444] Committed to state atheism, Castro's government took a negative view of Santería.[445] Practitioners experienced police harassment,[446] were denied membership of the Communist Party,[447] and faced limited employment opportunities.[448] They required police permission to perform rituals, which was sometimes denied.[449] The state nevertheless promoted art forms associated with Santería in the hope of using them to promote a unified Cuban identity.[450] While espousing anti-racism, Castro's government viewed the promotion of a separate Afro-Cuban identity as counter-revolutionary.[451]

Following the Soviet Union's collapse in the 1990s, Castro's government declared that Cuba was entering a "Special Period" in which new economic measures would be necessary. As part of this, it selectively supported Afro-Cuban and Santería traditions, partly out of a desire to boost tourism;[452] this Santería-focused tourism was called santurismo.[453] Priests of Santería, Palo, and Ifá all took part in government-sponsored tours for foreigners desiring initiation into such traditions, while Afro-Cuban floor shows became common in Cuban hotels.[446] In 1991, the Communist Party approved the admission of religious members, and in 1992 the constitution was amended to declare Cuba a secular rather than an atheist state.[454] This liberalisation allowed Santería to leave behind its marginalisation,[455] and during the 1990s it began to be practiced more openly.[456]

The second half of the 20th century saw a growing awareness of Santería's links with other orisha-worshipping religions in West Africa and the Americas.[457] These transnational links were reinforced when the Ooni of Ife Olubuse II, a prominent Yoruba political and religious leader, visited Cuba in 1987.[458] Cuba's government permitted the formation of the Yoruba Cultural Association, a non-governmental organization, in the early 1990s,[459] while various practitioners of Santería visited Nigeria to study traditional Yoruba religion.[460] A yorubización (Yorubization) process emerged, with attempts made to remove Roman Catholic elements from Santería;[461] this process was criticised by those who saw Santería's syncretism as a positive trait.[462]

The Cuban Revolution fuelled Cuban emigration, especially to the United States, Puerto Rico, Mexico, Colombia, and Venezuela.[463] With an increased Cuban presence in the U.S., Santería grew in many U.S. cities, being embraced by Latino Americans as well as European Americans and African Americans.[171] Some African Americans regarded it as an authentically African religion, especially when purged of Roman Catholic elements,[464] sometimes perceiving it as a religious wing of the Black Power movement.[153] A prominent exponent of this approach was the black nationalist activist Walter King. After being initiated in Cuba, he established a temple in Harlem before relocating with his followers in 1970 to a community in Sheldon, South Carolina, that they called the Yoruba Village of Oyotunji. Having a strained relationship with many other santeros and santeras, who accused him of racism, King gradually came to call his tradition "Orisha-Voodoo" rather than Santería.[465] In the U.S., Santería, along with Haitian Vodou, also proved an influence on the revival of Louisiana Voodoo in the late 20th century.[466] One of the most prominent figures in this revival, Ava Kay Jones, had previously been involved in King's Orisha-Voodoo.[466]

The scholars of religion Anibal Argüelles Mederos and Ileana Hodge Limonta estimated that in the early 21st century around 8% of Cubans were initiates of Santería, which would amount to between 800,000 and 900,000 people.[467] There are a greater number of people who are not initiates but turn to santeros and santeras for assistance on practical matters.[468] In 1991, the Cuban anthropologist López Valdés suggested that about 90 percent of Cuba's population practiced some form of religion and of that 90 percent, a greater number practiced one of the Afro-Cuban religions than "pure Catholicism".[469] In 2004, Wedel suggested that practitioners of Santería "greatly outnumber" those who practiced Roman Catholicism, Protestantism, or Judaism in Cuba.[470]

Although also found in rural areas,[471] in Cuba Santería has always been a primarily urban phenomenon,[33] predominating in the north-west provinces of La Habana and Matanzas.[472] While it has both Afro-Cuban and Euro-Cuban followers,[473] Wedel noted that in the 1990s Santería was "more common in working-class, low-income neighborhoods dominated by Afro-Cubans."[474] Wedel believed that men and women practice in roughly equal numbers.[475] Some practitioners grow up in Santería as the children of initiates, although others only approach the religion as adults.[476] While it accepts new followers, Santería is a non-proselytizing religion.[477]

Emigration has spread Santería across most of Latin America and also to the United States and Europe.[478] In Mexico, it established a particular presence in Veracruz and Mexico City,[479] in Canada it centred in Toronto,[480] while in Europe ilés have been formed in Spain[163] and Germany.[481] Santería was present in the U.S. by the 1940s,[482] increasing its presence following the Cuban Revolution.[483] Clustering in Florida, California, New Jersey, and New York,[163] it attracted converts from varied ethnic backgrounds.[484] U.S. ilés vary in their ethnic makeup,[166] often reflecting broader racial divisions in U.S. society.[485] Based on his ethnographic work in New York City during the 1980s, Samuel Gregory noted that there Santería was not a "religion of the poor", but contained a disproportionately high percentage of middle-class people such as teachers, social workers, and artists.[486] The American Religious Identification Survey of 2001 estimated that there were then approximately 22,000 practitioners in the U.S.,[487] although in the mid-1990s the scholar Joseph Murphy suggested that hundreds of thousands of people in the country had engaged with Santería in some form, often as clients.[488]

Reception

By the late 1980s, Santería had received considerable interest from established Christian churches, health professionals, and social scientists.[489] Some initiates mistrusted academics and were thus either vague or deliberately misleading in their answers to the latter's questions,[490] although the 1990s saw non-Cuban ethnographers seeking initiation into the religion, thus blurring the distinction between practitioner and anthropological observer.[491] The religion was also explored in other media; the Cuban filmmaker Gloria Rolando released the film Oggún in 1992.[492] Various songs have referenced Santería and its oricha; the Cuban American singer Celia Cruz for example recorded a version of "Que viva Chango" ("Long Live Chango"),[493] while a Cuban band called themselves Los Orichas.[494] Santería's influence can also be seen in the names of the Cuban liquor Santero and the state-owned machete factory Ogún.[494]

Christian views of Santería have been largely negative,[495] and in Cuba, it has faced much opposition from the Roman Catholic clerical establishment over the centuries.[496] Many Cuban intellectuals and academics also take a dim view of Santería.[497] Opposition to the religion is also evident outside Cuba. When the International Afro-Caribbean Festival in Veracruz was launched in 1994, it showcased art and ritual by Mexican santeros/santeras, although this brought public protests from Roman Catholic organizations, who regarded such rites as Satanic, and animal welfare groups, who deemed the sacrifices to be inhumane. The festival's organizers yielded to the pressure, cutting the Santería elements of the festival by 1998.[498] Pervasive stereotypes link Santería to criminal activity,[499] and its rituals for self-protection have been adopted by various groups involved in narcotics trafficking within the U.S.[158] Santeros and santeras are often accused of financially exploiting their initiates and clients—an accusation sometimes made by other practitioners of Santería itself.[500] Various practitioners have also found that their involvement in Santería has strained their relationship with spouses or other family members who are not involved,[115] and in some cases adherents have abandoned Santería to join other religious movements such as Pentecostalism.[501]

Notes

The spelling "orisha" is widely favored for the deities venerated in West Africa; it is sometimes also used for all traditions venerating these deities globally. The alternative spelling "oricha" is more commonly used in discussing Cuban Santería specifically.

La santería, culto lucumí o Regla de Osha, Regla Lucumí, Lucumí u Orisha[1] es una religión de la diáspora africana desarrollada en Cuba a fines del siglo XIX. Sus creencias derivan directamente de la cultura y religión yoruba, de origen africano, que en algunas zonas de la América española se sincretizaron con el catolicismo implantado por la monarquía hispánica,[2] así como con el espiritismo. No hay una autoridad central que controle la santería y existe una gran diversidad entre los practicantes, que se conocen como creyentes.[3]entre los que se encuentran diferentes grados de iniciación como aleyos, oloshas y babalawos.

La santería es politeísta y gira en torno a deidades llamadas orishas. Estas derivan sus nombres y atributos de las divinidades tradicionales yoruba y son sincretizadas con santos católicos. Se cree que cada ser humano tiene un vínculo personal con un orisha concreto que influye en su personalidad y destino y una vez que se realizan ciertos pasos y ya es de conocimiento para la persona quien es su orisha tutelar, este pasa a ser su guía. Se narran varios mitos sobre estos orishas que se consideran una parte de Olodumare, una deidad creadora trascendente. Se cree que Olodumare es la fuente última del aché(la fuerza sobrenatural que impregna el universo y que se invoca a través de ciertos rituales y ofrendas a través de los Orishas). Los practicantes veneran a los orisha en altares, ya sea en el hogar o en la casa (templo) o en los lugares naturales donde se manifiesta su energía primogenia. Los receptáculo de orisha llegan a estar en posesión de la persona cuando está ya se inició en un proceso que se llama kariosha dónde después de un periodo bajo normas y cumplimientos la persona pasa a ser Olosha (santero o santera) y luego expande su casa religiosa según las costumbres y tradición de sus mayores que le iniciaron. No siempre la pertenencia a una casa religiosa requiere una iniciación. Las ofrendas a los orisha incluyen velas, fruta, licor, flores obediencia y en casos específicos el sacrificio de algún animal específico el cual después del ritual es apto para el consumo. Un ritual central es el toque al orisha, una fiesta realizada con tambores o güiros en el que los practicantes cantan y bailan en honor a un orisha y llaman a sus divinas espiritualidades ya que en la creencia la música libera y purifica el alma de los presentes. Se utilizan varias formas de adivinación u oráculos principalmente el diloggún de orisha manejado por los oloshas y por los mayores sacerdotes dentro del campo de la santería "los Oriateces" y el oráculo de Ifá el ekueke o okpele manejado por los mayores sacerdotes de Ifá los babalawos para descifrar los mensajes de los orishas. También se hacen ofrendas a los espíritus de los ancestros principalmente a los precursores de la santería en Cuba y los ancestros familiares, y algunos practicantes se identifican como médiums espirituales y trabajan el campo espiritual directamente a través de lo que se conoce como misa espiritual, ceremonia de purificación muy ligada al catolicismo donde se busca realzar con la luz divina a X espíritu en pos de que su nuevo paso en araorun(reino espiritual) siempre sea llevadero y puro. Otros rituales dentro de tan bella religión son los de curación y la preparación de remedios herbales y talismanes que desempeñan asimismo un papel importante.[4]

La santería se desarrolló como el culto propio de los afrocubanos, cuyos antepasados habían sido esclavizados durante la época colonial, entre los siglos XVI y XIX. Forma parte del grupo de religiones afroamericanas. La santería comenzó a ser practicada por los antiguos esclavos negros y sus descendientes en la mitad occidental de la isla de Cuba (La Habana), esta religión reformada en Cuba que busca la unificación entre sus practicantes es la que más se extendió hasta el oriente del país y luego por las demás colonias a la llegada de los yoruba en el Caribe (Puerto Rico, República Dominicana, Venezuela y Panamá) la santería cubana hoy se practica en la mayoría de países del mundo como México, Argentina, Nicaragua, Colombia, Chile, Perú, inclusive gran parte del continente asiático y europeo. Se formó a partir de la mezcla de las religiones tradicionales traídas a Cuba por los africanos occidentales esclavizados, la mayoría de ellos yoruba, y el catolicismo, la única religión legalmente permitida en la isla por el gobierno colonial español. En las zonas urbanas del occidente de Cuba, estas tradiciones se fusionaron con ideas espiritistas para formar las primeras casas a finales del siglo XIX. En la Cuba colonial, sus rituales se debían practicar en la clandestinidad porque era marginalizada y perseguida por el yugo de la Iglesia católica. Después de que la guerra de Independencia cubana diera lugar a una república independiente en 1898, su nueva constitución consagró la libertad de culto. Sin embargo, la santería siguió siendo marginada por el establecimiento católico y eurocubano de Cuba, que la consideraba brujería. En la década de 1960, la creciente emigración que siguió a la Revolución cubana provocó la emigración de santeros a España, los Estados Unidos e Italia, entre otros,[5] difundiendo la santería en el extranjero. El comunismo trajo consigo la secularización, de manera que desde mitad del siglo XX su consideración social ha cambiado favorablemente y ahora muchos santeros de todo el mundo peregrinan a la isla de Cuba. A finales del siglo XX, la santería se vinculó cada vez más con tradiciones afines de África Occidental y América, como el vudú haitiano y el candomblé brasileño. Desde finales del siglo XX, algunos practicantes han hecho hincapié en un proceso de «yorubización» para eliminar las influencias católicas y crear formas de santería más cercanas a la religión tradicional yoruba sin perder la esencia de la santería legada a los descendientes cubanos de los africanos que hicieron dichas fusiones para evitar perder su culto y deidades.

Actualmente, las religiones principales en Cuba son la religión católica y la Santería Afrocubana o yoruba criolla, sin que tengan que ser excluyentes, al menos por parte de los practicantes de la religión afrocubana. Con todo, la Iglesia católica no reconoce a la santería como culto cristiano, sino pagano.[nota 1]Los practicantes de la santería se encuentran principalmente en las provincias cubanas de La Habana y Matanzas, aunque existen comunidades en toda la isla y en el extranjero, especialmente entre las diásporas cubanas de México, Estados Unidos y España. La religión sigue siendo más común entre las comunidades afrocubanas de clase trabajadora, aunque también la practican individuos de otras clases y orígenes étnicos. Se calcula que el número de iniciados es de varios cientos de miles. Estos iniciados actúan como devotos, adivinos y curanderos para un abanico mucho más amplio de adeptos con distintos niveles de fidelidad, lo que hace difícil determinar el número exacto de practicantes de la santería. Muchos de ellos también se identifican como practicantes de otra religión, normalmente el catolicismo.

Terminología

Durante la pertenencia a la corona hispánica era común referirse a ella como culto lucumí, que proviene de la expresión yoruba oloku mi («amigo mío»).[8] Los españoles la denominaron despectivamente «santería», para burlarse de la aparente devoción excesiva que mostraban los seguidores a sus santos.[8]

Asimismo se la llama Regla de Ocha (u Osha)-Ifá. En algunas ocasiones, los practicantes de la santería prefieren ser conocidos por las sociedades secretas a las que pertenecen, por ejemplo: Abakuá (en Cuba) y Amigos de San Lázaro (en Puerto Rico).[9]

Este término se ha difundido alrededor del mundo, aunque también con otra acepción: santero o imaginero es la persona que confecciona las imágenes de los santos católicos.[10]

Historia

La santería deriva de la unión de varias prácticas religiosas de distintas etnias provenientes de África, aunque la predominante de todas ellas es la religión yoruba, que se practica por la etnia homónima en la Guinea africana (Ilè Yorùbá), actual Nigeria, Benín y Togo desde hace miles de años. Los yorubas alcanzaron su apogeo cultural y político durante los periodos del Reino de Benín y el Imperio oyo (disuelto en el siglo XIX, momento en el que se intensificaría la inmigración africana a América),[9] en los cuales se daba el inhumano comercio de esclavos africanos, para ser llevados en masa al Nuevo Mundo.

Época virreinal

Cuba, la isla caribeña de la que procede la santería

Tras la conquista de Cuba por el Imperio español, las poblaciones arahuacas y siboney de la isla disminuyeron drásticamente.[11] Para conseguir una nueva fuente de mano de obra para las plantaciones de azúcar, tabaco y café que habían establecido en Cuba, los españoles recurrieron entonces a la compra de esclavos vendidos en los puertos del África Occidental.[12] La esclavitud estaba muy extendida en el África Occidental; la mayoría de los esclavos eran prisioneros de guerra capturados en conflictos con grupos vecinos, aunque algunos eran criminales convictos.[13] Los primeros africanos esclavizados llegaron a Cuba en 1511,[14] si bien la mayor parte llegó en el siglo XIX.[15] Cuba siguió recibiendo nuevos esclavos hasta al menos 1860,[14] y la emancipación total se produjo en 1886.[16] En total, entre 702 000 y 1 millón de africanos esclavizados fueron llevados a Cuba.[17] La mayoría procedía de una franja del África occidental situada entre los actuales países de Guinea y Angola.[18] La gran mayoría eran yorubas, procedentes de la zona comprendida por las actuales Nigeria y Benín;[19] los yorubas tenían una lengua y una cultura compartidas, pero estaban divididos entre diferentes países.[20] Se adherían en gran medida a la religión tradicional yoruba,[21] que incorporaba muchos cultos locales a los orishas, si bien ciertos orishas eran adorados ampliamente debido a la extensión del Imperio oyo, liderado por los yoruba.[22]

En Cuba, los esclavos eran divididos en grupos denominados naciones, a menudo con base en su puerto de embarque más que en su origen etnocultural real;[23] los que eran de habla yoruba, así como los de los pueblos Arará e Igbo, eran identificados como la «nación lucumí».[24] Los africanos occidentales esclavizados llevaron consigo sus religiones tradicionales a Cuba;[25] algunos pertenecían a la clase sacerdotal y poseían conocimientos de tradiciones como Ifá.[21] Aunque se adoraban cientos de orishas en toda África Occidental, menos de veinte llegaron a ser prominentes en la santería, quizás porque muchos cultos de orishas basados en el parentesco se perdieron cuando las redes de parentesco tradicionales fueron destruidas por la esclavitud.[26] Los orishas asociados a la agricultura se abandonaron, probablemente porque los esclavos tenían pocos motivos para proteger las cosechas de los esclavistas.[27] Muchos mitos asociados a los orishas se transformaron, creando relaciones de parentesco entre diferentes orishas que no estaban presentes en las mitologías del África Occidental.[28] A medida que se formaba la santería, distintos cultos de los orishas del África Occidental se reconstituyeron en un único sistema religioso,[29] que contaba con un panteón de orishas recién tipificado.[30]

En la Cuba española, el catolicismo era la única religión que podía practicarse legalmente.[31] La Iglesia católica de Cuba hizo esfuerzos por convertir a los africanos esclavizados, pero la instrucción en el catolicismo que se les impartía era normalmente superficial y esporádica.[23] En Cuba, las deidades tradicionales africanas siguieron siendo veneradas probablemente en clubes y organizaciones fraternales formadas por emigrantes africanos y sus descendientes.[32] Las más importantes eran los cabildos de nación, asociaciones que la clase gobernante consideraba un medio para controlar a la población afrocubana.[33] Funcionaban como sociedades de ayuda mutua y organizaban fiestas comunales, bailes y carnavales.[34] La Iglesia católica veía en estas agrupaciones un método de evangelización gradual, a través del cual toleraba la práctica de algunas costumbres africanas mientras erradicaba aquellas a las que se oponía más ferozmente.[35] Es probable que en estos grupos sacerdotes de diferentes orishas del África Occidental interactuaran y comenzaran a desarrollar un nuevo sistema.[36]

La religión católica fue la única aceptada por España en sus posesiones americanas. A los esclavos africanos se les prohibió practicar religiones que no fuesen la cristiana; sin embargo, no fueron del todo suprimidas, pues el animismo seguía siendo practicado clandestinamente en los hogares yoruba. Hay que tener en cuenta que desde África llegaron también sacerdotes yorubas e incluso Obas, es decir, reyes locales.[9] Debido a esta imposición religiosa (y para burlar el veto), los esclavos identificaron en el santoral católico un panteón equivalente al panteón yoruba, asociando cada deidad o energía africana a un santo cristiano. De esta manera pudieron seguir practicando la santería, llamada otrora «religión (de los) lucumí».[37]

Algo parecido ocurrió en Brasil con el Candomblé.[cita requerida]

Se tiene poca constancia escrita de la santería de esta época porque estaba prohibida. Se desconoce el número de fieles de aquella época, aunque esclavos africanos llegaron alrededor de 500 000 a los puertos de Cuba entre 1740 y 1840. Durante el siglo XIX se acabó de configurar la nueva religión santera al oeste de la Isla de Cuba (en las actuales provincias de La Habana y Matanzas, donde habría asentados una mayor cantidad de esclavos de origen yoruba, que se expandió más tarde a la mitad oriental. A Santiago de Cuba llegaron de la mano del santero Raynés, a principios del siglo XX.[9]

Esclavos africanos trabajando en una plantación de caña de azúcar en 1899.
Las leyes españolas, al mismo tiempo que permitían la esclavitud, trataban de suavizar esa injusticia concediendo algunos derechos a los esclavos, al menos en teoría. Tenían derecho a propiedad privada, al matrimonio y a la seguridad personal. También las leyes exigían que los esclavos fueran bautizados católicos como condición para su entrada legal a las Indias.[cita requerida]

La Iglesia trató de evangelizar a los africanos, pero las condiciones eran muy difíciles. Sin embargo, la Iglesia católica en Cuba se encontró en una situación muy precaria.[5] Además de la escasez de sacerdotes, la injusticia de la esclavitud dificultaba que los lucumí aceptaran lo que se les imponía.[5] Más allá de los motivos detrás de la iniciativa evangelizadora, los hombres que promulgaban la fe cristiana entre los esclavos, pertenecían a la misma raza y en muchas ocasiones a los mismos círculos sociales que los esclavistas. El resultado fue que muchos aceptaron exteriormente las enseñanzas católicas mientras interiormente mantenían su antigua religión.[cita requerida]

A finales del siglo XVIII y principios del XIX, nuevas leyes restringieron las actividades de los cabildos,[38] aunque su número de miembros aumentó en el siglo XIX.[39] En las últimas décadas del siglo XIX también creció el interés por el espiritismo, una religión basada en las ideas del escritor francés Allan Kardec, que en Cuba resultó especialmente popular entre el campesinado blanco, la clase criolla y la pequeña clase media urbana.[40] Ideas del espiritismo se filtraron e influyeron cada vez más en la santería.[41]

Formación e historia temprana

Las primeras casas de enseñanza de la santería surgieron en zonas urbanas del occidente de Cuba a finales del siglo XIX.[42] Al surgir un sacerdocio entrenado, aseguraron un nivel de estandarización entre los nuevos iniciados.[36] Si bien se inspiraba en cultos más antiguos de África Occidental, la santería era, como describe Clark, «un nuevo sistema religioso».[43] La migración del campo a la ciudad difundió la santería en otros lugares de Cuba,[44] y en la década de 1930 probablemente llegó a la segunda ciudad más grande de Cuba, Santiago de Cuba, situada en el extremo oriental de la isla.[45]

Tras la Guerra de Independencia, la isla se convirtió en una república independiente en 1898. En la república, los afrocubanos siguieron en gran medida estando excluidos del poder económico y político,[46] y los estereotipos negativos sobre ellos siguieron siendo generalizados entre la población eurocubana.[47] Las prácticas religiosas de los afrocubanos solían ser llamadas brujería y se pensaba que estaban relacionadas con la delincuencia.[48] En 1901 se publica la Primera Constitución cubana, en cuyo artículo 26 permite la libre profesión religiosa.[49] También la Constitución de 1940, promulgada por el dictador Batista, declaró al país como un estado laico, aunque permitió la enseñanza privada cristiana y el ejercicio de todos los cultos excepto aquellos que no respeten la moral cristiana (art. 35).[50] Este detalle hizo que la santería fuese, en la práctica, ilegal.[5] Si bien la nueva constitución de la república consagraba la libertad de culto y la nunca se crearon leyes en contra de la santería, a lo largo de la primera mitad del siglo XX se lanzaron varias campañas contra ella.[51] Estas campañas fueron a menudo alentadas por la prensa, que promovió las acusaciones de que niños blancos eran secuestrados y sacrificados en rituales de santería;[52] esto alcanzó un punto álgido en 1904, tras el asesinato de dos niños blancos en La Habana en casos que los investigadores especularon que estaban relacionados con la brujería.[53]

Uno de los primeros intelectuales en examinar la santería fue el abogado y etnógrafo Fernando Ortiz Fernández, que la analizó en su libro de 1906 Los negros brujos.[54] La consideraba un obstáculo para la integración social de los afrocubanos en la sociedad cubana en general y recomendaba su supresión.[55] En la década de 1920, se hicieron esfuerzos por incorporar elementos de la cultura afrocubana a una comprensión más amplia de la cultura cubana, por ejemplo, a través del movimiento literario y artístico del afrocubanismo. A menudo se inspiraban en la música, la danza y la mitología afrocubanas, pero solían rechazar los rituales de santería.[56] En 1942 se publicó el Manual de santería de Rómulo Lachatañeré, que representó el primer intento académico de entender la santería como una religión;[57] a diferencia de Ortiz, sostenía que la tradición debía verse como un sistema religioso y no como una forma de brujería.[58] Lachatañeré contribuyó a promover el término Santería para referirse al fenómeno, considerándolo una descripción más neutra que los términos cargados de peyorativos como brujería, entonces de uso común.[59]

Ejemplo de sincretización: altar dedicado a San Lázaro-Babalú Ayé, en el Valle de Viñales (Pinar del Río, Cuba).
En «El Gran Libro de la Santería» de Delgado Torres[60] el autor describió la Oración a San Froilán, donde expone y demuestra que dicho santo, desde el punto de vista del sincretismo, pudiera de una manera sincretizarse con la deidad yoruba Ossaín, lo cual acentúa todo este estudio la universalidad de la teología de la Santería, una de las herederas de la cultura yoruba, es decir, la Santería Cubana.[61]

Según Mercedes Sandoval, la santería acabó calando también entre la población blanca y mestiza de Cuba por cuestiones de salud, puesto que una de las principales funciones de los santeros es la curación por la fe.[9] También fue importante la difusión de la música, la mitología y demás idiosincrasias yoruba por la población que no era estrictamente negra, estudiosos elevan a 70 el porcentaje de cubanos que tienen algún tipo de relación más o menos cercana con la santería.

La Revolución cubana de 1959 hizo que la isla se convirtiera en un estado marxista-leninista gobernado por el Partido Comunista de Cuba de Fidel Castro.[62] Comprometido con el ateísmo estatal, el gobierno de Castro adoptó una opinión negativa de la santería.[63] Los practicantes sufrieron el acoso de la policía,[64] se les negó la afiliación al Partido Comunista[65] y se les limitaron las oportunidades de empleo.[66] Los creyentes necesitaban permiso de la policía para realizar rituales, que a veces se les negaba.[67] No obstante, el Estado promovió formas artísticas asociadas a la santería con la esperanza de utilizarlas para promover una identidad cubana unificada.[68] El gobierno castrista, a la vez que defendía el antirracismo, consideraba que la promoción de una identidad afrocubana separada era contrarrevolucionaria.[69]

Tras el colapso de la Unión Soviética en la década de 1990, el gobierno de Castro declaró que Cuba entraba en un «periodo especial» en el que serían necesarias nuevas medidas económicas. Como parte de esto, apoyó selectivamente las tradiciones afrocubanas y de santería, en parte por el deseo de impulsar el turismo;[70] este turismo centrado en la santería se denominó santurismo.[71] Sacerdotes de santería, Ifá y Palo participaron en giras patrocinadas por el gobierno para extranjeros que deseaban iniciarse en dichas tradiciones, mientras que espectáculos afrocubanos se hicieron comunes en los hoteles cubanos.[64] En 1991, el Partido Comunista aprobó la admisión de miembros religiosos, y en 1992 se modificó la constitución para declarar a Cuba como un estado laico en vez de ateo.[72] Esta liberalización permitió que la santería dejara atrás su marginalizción,[73] y durante la década de 1990 comenzó a practicarse más abiertamente.[74]

El teólogo Frei Betto, en su libro Fidel y la religión (1985), escribió sobre la relación de Fidel Castro con la santería. Comenta que no era practicante, pero sí se inició. Muchos santeros que apoyaron la Revolución comunista vieron en él un liberador espiritual para Cuba,[75] considerándolo hijo de la deidad Eleggúá.[76]

En la segunda mitad del siglo XX, se apreció una creciente conciencia de los vínculos de la santería con otras religiones que rinden culto a los orishas en África Occidental y América.[77] Estos vínculos transnacionales se reforzaron cuando el Ooni de Ife (el gobernante tradicional de Ile-Ife y jefe espiritual del pueblo yoruba), Olubuse II, un destacado líder político y religioso yoruba, visitó Cuba en 1987.[78] El gobierno cubano permitió la formación de la Asociación Cultural Yoruba, una organización no gubernamental, a principios de la década de 1990, mientras que varios practicantes de la santería visitaron Nigeria para estudiar la religión tradicional yoruba.[79] Surgió un proceso de «yorubización», con intentos de eliminar los elementos católicos de la santería;[77] este proceso fue criticado por quienes veían el sincretismo de la santería como un rasgo positivo.[80]

Asimismo, con el triunfo de la revolución comunista en Cuba en 1959, más de un millón de cubanos se exiliaron en otros países (principalmente en las ciudades de Miami, Nueva York y Los Ángeles). Entre ellos, había santeros que propagaron la Santería en sus nuevos ambientes.[cita requerida]La Revolución Cubana impulsó la emigración cubana, especialmente a Estados Unidos, Puerto Rico, México, Colombia y Venezuela.[81] Con el aumento de la presencia cubana en Estados Unidos, la santería creció en muchas ciudades del país, siendo adoptada por hispanoamericanos, así como por europeos y afroamericanos.[82] Algunos afroamericanos la consideraban una religión auténticamente africana, sobre todo cuando se purgaba de los elementos católicos,[83] y a veces la percibían como un ala religiosa del movimiento del Poder Negro.[84] Un destacado exponente de este enfoque fue el activista nacionalista negro Walter King. Tras ser iniciado en Cuba, estableció un templo en Harlem antes de trasladarse con sus seguidores en 1970 a una comunidad en Sheldon, Carolina del Sur, que llamaron el Pueblo Yoruba de Oyotunji. Al tener una relación tensa con muchos otros santeros y santeras, que le acusaban de racismo, King pasó a llamar a su tradición «Orisha-Vudú» en lugar de Santería.[85] En Estados Unidos, la santería, junto con el vudú haitiano, también influyó en el renacimiento del vudú de Luisiana a finales del siglo XX. Una de las figuras más destacadas de este renacimiento, Ava Kay Jones, había participado anteriormente en el Orisha-Vudú de King.[86]

Hoy en día, la santería se da en diversas zonas de América, incluido lugares con gran población hispana de Estados Unidos (Florida, Nueva York, San Francisco, Nueva Orleans, Los Ángeles, Miami y San Diego).[cita requerida]

En 1992, el académico nigeriano Wándé Abímbọ́lá (profesor de la Universidad de Lagos y estudioso de la cultura y lengua yoruba) afirmó que «existen más babalawos en Puerto Rico que en Nigeria».[9] Los babalawos cubanos llegaron a Puerto Rico en los años 1960.

Actualmente, la religión cuenta con presencia también en España, especialmente en Canarias por su estrecha relación con Cuba, México, Países Bajos, Alemania, Inglaterra, Francia, y otros países en los cuales hay un número considerable de inmigrantes cubanos. En Venezuela, en la región de Caracas es donde se concentra la mayor cantidad de santeros y babalawos en el país pero también se encuentran en Cumaná, Coro y Maracay.[87]

Doctrina

Los pilares fundamentales de la religión se basan en el culto a los ancestros muertos (egúns) y en el conocimiento de que existe un Dios único (Oloddumare) y se relaciona con los seres humanos a través de extensiones del mismo, que también son divinidades, a las cuales los yorubas denominaron orishás. Por estas características, se considera que es una religión politeísta.[cita requerida]

Los que profesan la santería creen en el determinismo, es decir, que las vidas vienen determinadas desde antes de nacer, así como en la reencarnación.[5]

Olodumare y los orisha

La santería cree en una fuerza o dios universal del que proviene todo lo creado, llamado Olodumare (del yoruba, oloddumare; literalmente, «el omnipotente»), Olofi u Olorun.[88] Los practicantes creen que esta divinidad creó el universo, pero se interesa poco por los asuntos humanos.[89] En tanto esta deidad creadora es inaccesible para la humanidad,[90] no se le dedican grandes ofrendas.[90] Las tres facetas de esta divinidad se entienden de forma ligeramente diferente: Olodumare representa la esencia divina de todo lo que existe, Olorun se considera el creador de todos los seres, mientras que Olofi habita en toda la creación.[91] Al adoptar una forma tripartita, esta deidad muestra similitudes con la Trinidad cristiana.[91]

Los orisha

La santería es politeísta[92] y gira en torno a deidades llamadas orisha,[93] ocha[94] o santos.[95] El término orisha puede ser tanto singular como plural, porque el lucumí, el lenguaje ritual de la santería, carece de marcadores de plural para los sustantivos.[96] Los practicantes creen que algunos orisha fueron creados antes que la humanidad, mientras que otros eran originalmente humanos que se convirtieron en orisha por alguna cualidad notable.[97] Algunos practicantes perciben a los orisha como facetas de Olodumare, y por tanto creen que al venerarlos están adorando en última instancia al dios creador.[25] Algunos orisha son femeninos, otros masculinos.[98] No se les considera totalmente benévolos, ya que son capaces tanto de dañar como de ayudar a los humanos,[99] y muestran una mezcla de emociones, virtudes y vicios.[100]

Mitos de origen y otras historias sobre los orichas reciben el nombre de patakíes.[102] Se entiende que cada oricha «gobierna» un aspecto particular del universo,[94] y se les ha descrito como personificaciones de diferentes facetas del mundo natural.[103] Viven en un reino llamado orún, que se contrapone al ayé, el reino de la humanidad.[104] Cada orisha tiene sus propios caminos[105] o manifestaciones,[106] un concepto similar al de los avatares hindúes.[107] El número de caminos que tiene un orisha varía, y algunos tienen varios cientos.[108] Los practicantes creen que los orisha pueden habitar físicamente ciertos objetos, entre ellos piedras y conchas de cauri, que se consideran sagrados.[109] Cada orisha también está asociado a canciones, ritmos, colores, números, animales y comidas específicos.[110]

Entre los orisha se encuentran las cuatro «deidades guerreras», o guerros: Elegguá, Oggun, Oshosi y Osun. Elegguá es considerado el guardián de los cruces de caminos y los umbrales;[111] es el mensajero entre la humanidad y los orisha, y la mayoría de las ceremonias comienzan solicitando su permiso para continuar.[112] Se le representa de color negro por un lado y rojo por el otro,[113] y los practicantes suelen colocar una cabeza de cemento decorada con conchas de cauri que representa a Elegguá detrás de las puertas principales, custodiando el umbral de la calle.[114] El segundo guerro es Oggun, considerado como el orisha de las armas y la guerra,[115] y también del hierro y los herreros.[116] El tercero, Oshosi, se asocia con los bosques y la caza,[117] mientras que el cuarto, Osun, es un protector que avisa a los practicantes cuando están en peligro.[118]

Siendo quizá el orisha más popular,[119]Changó o Shango se asocia con el rayo y el fuego.[120] Otra orisha destacada es Yemayá, la deidad asociada a la maternidad, la fertilidad y el mar.[121]Ochún es la orisha de los ríos y del amor romántico,[122] mientras que Oiá es un guerrero asociado con el viento, el rayo y la muerte, y es visto como el guardián del cementerio.[123] Obatalá es orisha de la verdad y la justicia y se le considera responsable de ayudar a moldear la humanidad.[124] Babalú Ayé es el oricha asociado a la enfermedad y su curación,[125] mientras que Ossaín está vinculado a las hierbas y la curación.[126] Orula es el orisha de la adivinación, que en la mitología de la santería estuvo presente en la creación de la humanidad y, por tanto, conoce el destino de todos.[127] Ibeyí adopta la forma de gemelos que protegen a los niños.[126] Olokún es el orisha patrón de los mercados, mientras que su esposa Olosá está asociada a las lagunas.[126] Agagyú es el oricha de los volcanes y los páramos.[126] Algunos orisha se consideran antagónicos a otros; Changó y Oggun son, por ejemplo, enemigos.[128]

Aunque en la santería el término santo se considera un sinónimo de orisha y no es una referencia literal a los santos cristianos,[129] los orisha son equiparados o fusionados a menudo con uno o más santos católicos basándose en atributos similares.[130] Por ejemplo, el Santo Niño de Atocha, una representación de Cristo como niño, se fusiona con Elegguá, a quien se considera de naturaleza infantil.[131] Babalú Ayé, que se asocia con la enfermedad, se identifica a menudo con el santo católico Lázaro, que resucitó de entre los muertos, mientras que Changó se fusiona con Santa Bárbara porque ambos visten de rojo.[132] La santa patrona de Cuba, Nuestra Señora de la Caridad, se fusiona con Ochún.[133] Se ha afirmado que los esclavos yorubas vincularon inicialmente sus deidades tradicionales con los santos cristianos como un medio de ocultar a las autoridades españolas el culto que seguían rindiendo a las primeras,[134] o como medio de facilitar la movilidad social al asimilarse a las normas sociales católicas.[135]

Los orishás, además, velan para que cada mortal cumpla el destino que tiene marcado desde su nacimiento.[cita requerida]

Relaciones con los orichas

La santería se centra en cultivar una relación recíproca con los orisha,[94] ya que los seguidores creen que estas deidades pueden interceder en los asuntos humanos y ayudar a las personas si se les apacigua.[97] Los practicantes sostienen que cada persona «nace de» un orisha en particular, se sea devoto o no a esa deidad.[136] Se trata de una conexión que, según los adeptos, se ha establecido antes del nacimiento.[137] Los practicantes se refieren a este orisha como el que «gobierna la cabeza» de una persona;[94] es el «dueño de su cabeza».[138] Si el orisha es masculino, se describe como el «padre» del individuo; si el oricha es femenino, es la «madre» de la persona.[139] Se considera que este orisha influye en la personalidad del individuo, y puede reconocerse examinando los rasgos de la personalidad de la persona[140] o mediante la adivinación.[141]

Para obtener la protección de un orisha concreto, se anima a los practicantes a hacerle ofrendas, a patrocinar ceremonias en su honor y a vivir de acuerdo con sus deseos, tal y como se determinan mediante la adivinación.[142] A los practicantes les preocupa la posibilidad de ofender a los orishas.[143] Los creyentes creen que los orisha pueden comunicarse con los humanos a través de la adivinación, las oraciones, los sueños, la música y la danza.[144] Muchos practicantes también describen cómo «leen» mensajes de los orisha en las interacciones y acontecimientos cotidianos.[145] Por ejemplo, un practicante que pasa junto un niño en un cruce de tráfico puede interpretarlo como un mensaje de Elegguá, que a menudo se representa como un niño y que se percibe como el «guardián» de los cruces de caminos o calles. En ese momento, el practicante puede recurrir a la adivinación para determinar el significado preciso del encuentro. La información obtenida de estos mensajes puede ayudar a los practicantes a tomar decisiones sobre sus vidas.[146]

El nacimiento y los difuntos

Un altar de santería en Trinidad, Cuba

La santería enseña que la cabeza humana contiene la esencia de la persona, su eledá[147] u orí.[148] Sostiene que antes de nacer, el eledá va ante Olodumare, donde se le da su carácter esencial,[148] y forma un vínculo con el orisha que se convierte en «el dueño de su cabeza».[149] El concepto de eledá deriva de la religión tradicional yoruba, donde se considera el «doble espiritual» de la persona. En la santería, este concepto se ha sincretizado con las creencias católicas sobre los ángeles de la guarda y nociones espiritistas de las protecciones o espíritus protectores. No existe una ortodoxia estricta sobre esta cuestión y, por tanto, las interpretaciones difieren.[150] Los practicantes suelen creer que cada persona tiene un destino[151] o camino específico,[152] aunque su suerte no está completamente predeterminada.[151]

La veneración de los ancestros es importante en la santería.[153] La religión implica propiciar a los espíritus de los difuntos, conocidos como egun,[154]espíritus[155] o muertos.[156] Los practicantes creen que hay que tratar a los difuntos con respeto, temor y amabilidad, y se les consulta en todas las ceremonias.[157] Aunque no se considera que los muertos sean tan poderosos como los orisha, se cree que pueden ayudar a los vivos,[157] con los que pueden comunicarse a través de los sueños, la intuición y la posesión espiritual.[151] La santería enseña que una persona puede aprender a ver y comunicarse con los muertos.[157] Los practicantes suelen hacer ofrendas, normalmente siete vasos de agua, a los egun para aplacarlos y complacerlos.[157] Se propicia especialmente a los egun considerados como ancestros;[94] estos ancestros pueden incluir tanto a los ancestros hereditarios como a antiguos miembros de la propia congregación,[158] y los practicantes creen que un creyente se convierte en ancestro cuando muere.[159]

Los adeptos creen que todo el mundo tiene un cuadro espiritual de egun que les protege.[160] Una persona puede llegar a tener hasta 25 protectores.[137] La religión sostiene que todas las personas tienen múltiples egun que les acompañan en todo momento, y que éstos pueden ser benévolos, malévolos o una mezcla de ambos.[157] Los practicantes también creen que el número y la identidad de estos espíritus pueden determinarse mediante la adivinación.[157] Se distingue entre espíritus evolucionados, que pueden ayudar a aquellos a los que están unidos, y espíritus no evolucionados, que carecen de la sabiduría y la habilidad para ser útiles y, en cambio, causan estragos.[161] La santería enseña que, mediante ofrendas y oraciones, las personas pueden ayudar a algunos de sus espíritus no evolucionados a convertirse en evolucionados.[161] La santería también divide a los espíritus en categorías que exhiben rasgos diferentes, reflejando estereotipos sobre distintos grupos sociales,[151] de manera que tales espíritus a menudo son mostrados como africanos, haitianos, gitanos, árabes o indios.[162] Los espíritus gitanos, por ejemplo, se consideran capaces de prever problemas inminentes y diagnosticar enfermedades, mientras que los espíritus congo de África se perciben como fuertes, poderosos y capaces de guiar a la gente en circunstancias hostiles.[151]

Aché

El ashé o aché es un concepto cosmológico importante en la religión tradicional yoruba y se ha transferido a la santería.[163] El aché se considera el poder organizador del cosmos;[164] las hispanistas Margarite Fernández Olmos y Lizabeth Paravisini-Gebert se refirieron a él como «una energía o poder espiritual-místico que se encuentra en diversos grados y en muchas formas en todo el universo».[97] El antropólogo médico Johan Wedel lo describió como «fuerza vital»[165] o «fuerza divina»,[166] mientras que el folclorista Michael Atwood Mason llamó al aché «poder generativo ritual».[25] La etnomusicóloga Katherine Hagedorn describió el aché como «el potencial divino realizado e inherente en todos los aspectos de la vida, incluso en objetos aparentemente inertes».[163] Añadió que «Aché no es bueno ni malo; más bien, aché es movimiento».[159]

Aunque consideran a Olodumare como la máxima encarnación del aché,[167] los creyentes creen que el aché impregna toda la vida[97] y está presente tanto en el mundo visible como en el invisible.[168] No obstante, se considera que a veces se congrega de forma más densa, por ejemplo, en las fuerzas de la naturaleza, en lugares específicos y en ciertas personas;[168] se cree que los iniciados atraen más aché que otras personas.[163] La santería sostiene que el aché puede emanar del cuerpo humano a través de la palabra, el canto, la danza y el toque de tambores,[169] y que puede ser transmitido mediante actos como el canto de alabanzas a los orisha o el sacrificio de un animal.[170] Entre los practicantes, a veces se describe que el aché transmite nociones de suerte, salud y prosperidad,[166] y tiene el poder de fortalecer la salud de una persona.[171] Es común la expresión «tener aché» en Cuba por «tener suerte».[172]

Moralidad, ética y roles de género

Dos practicantes de la santería participando en una ceremonia de Cajón de Muertos en 2011

La santería tiene normas de comportamiento que se espera de sus practicantes,[173] fomentando conductas influenciadas por las historias mitológicas sobre los orisha.[28] La religión presenta reglas estrictas sobre cómo interactuar con otras personas y con lo sobrenatural,[174] por ejemplo, haciendo hincapié en el respeto a los mayores y a los superiores.[175] Una actitud general en la santería es que si una persona mantiene un buen carácter, los orisha le ayudarán.[176] Los practicantes generalmente adoptan posturas socialmente conservadoras, con gran respeto por las estructuras familiares tradicionales, el matrimonio, la fidelidad y la crianza de los hijos;[177] seguidores en los Estados Unidos suelen adoptar posturas más progresistas en cuestiones de género y sexualidad que sus homólogos de Cuba.[178]

La religión es no-dualista y no considera que el universo esté dividido entre el bien y el mal, sino que todas las cosas se perciben como complementarias y relativas.[179] Varios académicos han descrito la santería como poseedora de un ethos del «aquí y ahora» distinto al del cristianismo,[180] y la científica social Mercedes C. Sandoval sugirió que muchos cubanos y cubanas eligieron la santería en lugar del catolicismo o el espiritismo porque hace hincapié en técnicas para afrontar los problemas pragmáticos de la vida.[181] En Estados Unidos, algunos adeptos afroamericanos han contrastado lo que consideran el ethos de origen africano de la santería con los orígenes no africanos del cristianismo,[182] adoptándola así como una religión fácilmente combinable con el nacionalismo negro.[84]

La estudiosa de la religión Mary Ann Clark categorizó a la santería como una religión «orientada a la mujer y normativa femenina»,[183] argumentando que se espera que quienes la practiquen asuman «roles de género femenino» durante sus rituales.[184] Las mujeres pueden ocupar los más altos cargos de liderazgo,[185] aunque se les imponen restricciones cuando están menstruando.[186] También se imponen restricciones similares a los varones homosexuales, prohibiéndoles tradicionalmente participar en ciertas formas de adivinación y en la percusión ritual.[187] Sin embargo, muchos hombres homosexuales son santeros,[188] y algunas santeras son lesbianas.

[187] Existe el estereotipo de que todos los sacerdotes varones de la santería son homosexuales,[189] y miembros de otras tradiciones afrocubanas con una orientación más masculina, como el Palo, la han denigrado a menudo por estar dominada por mujeres y hombres que consideran «afeminados».[190]

Santero en La Habana

La santería tiene una jerarquía sacerdotal. Los sacerdotes son comúnmente conocidos como santeros u olorichas. Aunque se consideren a los Orisha e Ifá como ramas separadas, en ambas los babalawos (ocasionalmente, babalaos) son los máximos sacerdotes de la santería. Una vez que esos sacerdotes han iniciado a otros sacerdotes, se les conoce como babalorichás «padre de orichá» (para hombre) e iyalorichás «madre de orichá» (para mujer), que son santeros con ahijados consagrados. Los iyawos son santeros en su primer año de consagrados, y los aleyos son los creyentes que no se han consagrado. Si practican la adivinación de los orichás, se les denomina italeros.

Todos ellos son santeros, iniciados mediante ritos específicos (léase más abajo), el primero de los cuales es un ritual de purificación y la entrega de cinco collares, representando a Shangó, Obbatalá, Yemayá, Oshún y Elegguá o recibiendo a los orishás guerreros, que son Elegguá, Oggún, Oshosi y Ozun, que son santos consagrados en otanes [piedras].

Babalawo o babalao

El Babalawo (del yoruba: Babaaláwo «padre del secreto»), usualmente deformado a babalao, es la persona iniciada a una deidad e intérprete de deberes y enseñanzas. En la Nigeria yoruba también se les llama simplemente Awo. Originalmente los Awos debían memorizar e interpretación los 256 Odus (escrituras sagradas) y los numerosos versos de Ifá. Tradicionalmente, el Babalawo además tiene otras especialidades profesionales, como por ejemplo, de herborista. El Babalawo, como guía espiritual, psicológico y ético, es entrenado en la determinación de los problemas y en la aplicación de soluciones seculares o espirituales para la resolución de los mismos. Su función primordial es asistir a las personas a encontrar, entender y a procesar la vida hasta que experimenen la sabiduría espiritual como una parte de las experiencias cotidianas.

Babalawos famosos

Al ser una religión tan apartada se tiene poca constancia sobre sus babalaos. Algunos de los más importantes del sacerdocio son:

Ño Remigio Herrera (¿1811?-1905): cuyo nombre original es Adeshina Obara Meyi fue un babalao de Nigeria y trasladado como esclavo a Matanzas. Fue obligado a bautizarse como Remigio Lucumí. Se cuenta que se tragó sus ikines de sacerdote, por lo que pudo traérselos consigo cuando fue capturado como esclavo.[191]

Ño Carlos Addebí (???-???): originalmente Ojuani Boká contemporáneo a Adeshina, se conocieron y juntos promulgaron la reglá ifá. Consiguió su libertad en Camagüey.
Bernardo Rojas (1881-1959), llamado Irete Tendi: de la segunda generación de babalaos, fue formado por el mismo Adeshina, al cual cuidó hasta su muerte.
Taita Gaitán (???-???): también Oggunda fun, nacido en Matanzas, su padrino fue el babalawo esclavo Lugery (Oyekun Meyi) que consiguió volver a Nigeria.
Enrique Hernández (1918-2017), «Enriquito»: nació en Guanabacoa (Cuba) ciudad con gran presencia santera. También le llamaban Tata Nganga.
Otros babalawos reconocidos son Cornelio Vidal (el primer babalawo criollo, o sea de raza no-negra), Asunción Villalonga, Ramón Febles (Ogbe tua), Panchito Febles (Otura Niko), Miguel Febles, Sevilla Baró (Oshe Yekun), el Chino Poey (Oshe Paure), Felix el Negro (Osa Rete)...

Oráculos y adivinación

La ceremonia Diloggun o de las dieciséis caracolas. El santero usa conchas para comunicarse con los orishas.
La adivinación se da a través de los tres oráculos (ceremonias) que componen la religión. Los babalawos realizan el oráculo de «ifá» (Se adivina con un tablero de ifá, por ejemplo, el «ekuele»). Los santeros realizan el oráculo del «Dilogún» (con caracolas) y el oráculo del «Biagué» (con un coco). Hay otros oráculos orientan al consultador mediante la interpretación de «oddun» o signos.

Fetiches orishas

La creación de figuras para el uso espiritual es una práctica que se encuentra en religiones de todo el mundo. Estas figuras representan a dioses, fenómenos y espíritus, no a individuos vivos y suelen ser de mayor tamaño y estar realizados en madera, para que perduren y no en tela o materiales frágiles como los fetiches del vudú, cuyo uso y función son sólo temporales.[192]

El vudú es el resultado del sincretismo que se produjo en Haití entre la religión yoruba ("Ocha"), la magia bantú regla de Palo Monte y la magia clásica europea. El resultado es muy parecido a la Quimbanda en Brasil, de origen angoleño o la regla Palo Kimbiza en Cuba de origen congoleño. De hecho la regla Kimbiza cubana tiene cierta influencia haitiana en sus orígenes.

Cada deidad tiene uno o varios objetos asociados, como lo son las plumas de pavo y la miel para Ochún, las conchas para Yemayá, las llaves para Exú o las hachas y los tambores Batá para Changó.[193]

Herbología curativa lucumí

Florifundio (Brugmansia candida) es una planta medicinal en la cultura popular cubana. El antropólogo Brian Du toit publicó en 2001 Curación Etnomédica (Popular) en el Caribe, donde afirmaba que «Cuba es una de las regiones en las que se ha realizado una mayor cantidad de investigaciones etnobotánicas».[194] Du Toit cita los estudios de Lydia Cabrera sobre el papel religioso y curativo de las plantas medicinales indígenas, y José Gallo en la compilación de 900 páginas de medicina popular; Las yerbas con propiedades medicinales se llaman ewés. El Florifundio (Brugmansia candida) es efectiva como broncodilatador, debido a su contenido de escopolamina y atropina en las hojas. La caña santa, yerba de limón o limoncillo (hierba Cymbopogon) se usa para la presión arterial baja y como antiinflamatorio. El té de tomillo y el aceite de ricino se utilizan para el embarazo y la malva té (Corchorus siliquosus) induce la rápida expulsión de la placenta.[194]

Hay tres orishas de la curación principalmente (aunque se pueda invocar a otros): Ossaín, el orichá de las hierbas y patrón de curanderos (por ello se les llama osainistas), que está sincretizado con San José, San Benito, San Silvestre o San Jerónimo; Babalú Ayé, el orichá de las enfermedades contagiosas y epidémicas y patrón de las víctimas y supervivientes de la viruela, la lepra y las enfermedades de la piel (también se ha convertido en el patrón de las personas con VIH/sida); e Inle, la patrona de los médicos, del método científico para la curación y de los problemas de salud más específicos. Inle es también la patrona de gays y lesbianas.

Las hierbas también pueden ser usadas para inducir al sacerdote a ser poseído por la deidad (trance) utilizando las propiedades alucinógenas de la trompeta del diablo (Datura metel) y el estramonio (Datura stramonium). Ambas tienen atropina y escopolamina, más conocido como burundanga, causando amnesia. También son valorados los psicoactivos del sapo de caña (Bufo marinus).[194]

Además de ser herbolario, la práctica tradicional de sanación santera tiene un aspecto espiritual. La santería tiene un enfoque holístico, reconociendo la conexión con el corazón, la mente y el cuerpo.[195] Según esta filosofía, el mundo fluye con la energía vital primordial llamada aché o crecimiento, la fuerza hacia la integridad y la divinidad. Aché es la corriente que el canal de Santería inicia para que les permita cumplir su camino en la vida. Cuando una persona está enferma, el sanador piensa, interpreta y reacciona, considerando la enfermedad no solo como una disfunción física, sino también como una interfaz con el sufrimiento y la mala suerte en la vida, que se cree que es provocada por la actividad de los malos espíritus.

Espiritismo

Du Troit señala que la santería tiene un fuerte componente espiritista. El espiritismo es la creencia popular en América Latina de que los espíritus benignos y malignos pueden afectar a la salud, suerte u otros aspectos de los mortales. No se debe confundir con el espiritismo fundado por Allan Kardec, aunque se basan en una idea parecida.

La reputación de los espiritistas suele ser negativa, ya que se les relaciona con la brujería. Antes de la secularización los curanderos tradicionales de la santería y otras culturas latinoamericanas que trabajan con la curación a través del mundo espiritual se consideraban oficialmente como obradores del diablo desde la Iglesia católica. El modelo único de conocimiento médico es apreciado como un sistema de etnofarmacología o etnomedicina.

Ofrendas adimú

Los adimú suelen envolverse en hojas de maíz.

Los adimú son ofrendas comestibles o sacrificios que se le presenta a los orishas con la finalidad de obtener el bien deseado o de consolidarlo en caso de ya tenerlo. Este bien que aparece en la consulta del diloggun o caracol, puede ser «yale» (completo), o «cotoyale» (incompleto). Se dice Adimú cuando la ofrenda se coloca al pie del orisha que lo haya solicitado; aladimú, si se coloca sobre la deidad.[196]

Algunos ejemplos de adimú son:

El oguidi, también llamado oguede o agguidi es un dulce parecido al tamal que se ofrendan a los orishá de los ancestros, Oya y a Eggun, o también a Oggun. Se prepara con harina de maíz, un poco de vinagre, azúcar moreno, canela en rama, zumo de limón, anís y vainilla envuelto en hojas de plátano y ofrendado con miel o melao de caña. Después se presentan delante de Oya o de la teja de eggun durante los días que se determine al darle coco al santo y después se llevan al cementerio o al lugar que indique la tirada del coco.

A Oshun se le presenta con miel, a Obatala con cascarilla (cáscara de huevo pulverizada, producto valorado por los lucumí) y manteca de cacao, a Yemayá con melaza, a Eleggua con corojo, y así sucesivamente al resto de los Orishas utilizando los ingredientes correspondientes.

Rituales y ceremonias religiosas

Igdobun, altar santero en Cuba.

La santería no tiene un credo central para sus prácticas religiosas; aunque se entiende en términos de sus rituales y ceremonias.[195] Estos rituales y ceremonias tienen lugar en lo que se conoce como casa-templo o casa de santos, también conocida como ilé. Los sacerdotes realizan las ceremonias en sus propias casas, porque la santería carece de templos. Los sacerdotes y las sacerdotisas construyen los santuarios ilé a cada orichá, creando un espacio para el culto llamado igbodun, el altar.[195] En el igbodun se muestran tres tronos distintos (cubiertos con azul regio, blanco y rojo satinados) que representan los asientos de las reinas, los reyes y los guerreros deificados.[197]

Cada ilé está compuesto por aquellos que ocasionalmente buscan la guía de los orishas así como aquellos que están en proceso de convertirse en sacerdotes.[198]

Los numerosos cabildos y casas de santos que surgieron en los siglos XIX y XX son considerados ahora como los lugares donde se originaron y preservaron la cultura y religión cubana Lucumí.[198]

Para pertenecer a la santería los creyentes deben pasar primero por una serie de rituales que llevan un orden en específico que debe respetarse. Uno de los sacramentos o rituales para entrar es el Kari osha, es decir, «hacerse santo». Un santero ya puede practicar la santería y darle continuidad iniciando a más personas, esto siempre y cuando no le sea prohibido por su ángel de la guarda.

La santería es una religión orientada a la práctica; la corrección ritual se considera más importante que la creencia.[199] Tiene un elaborado sistema de rituales,[200] y sus ritos denominados ceremonias.[201] La mayoría de sus actividades giran en torno a los orisha[168] y se centran en la resolución de los problemas de la vida cotidiana.[176] Los practicantes suelen utilizar el término «trabajo» para referirse a la actividad ritual.[202]

La santería es una religión iniciática,[203] organizada en torno a una jerarquía estructurada.[204] Un ethos de secretismo impregna muchas de sus prácticas,[205] y los iniciados suelen negarse a hablar de ciertos temas con los no iniciados.[206] Por esta razón, Mason describe la santería como una sociedad secreta.[82] Para los rituales, se suele utilizar la lengua lucumí.[207] A veces se denomina la lengua de los orichas[208]y se considera un lenguaje divino a través del cual los practicantes pueden contactar con las deidades.[209] Aunque algunos practicantes se sienten incómodos utilizándolo,[210] la mayoría de los iniciados conocen decenas o cientos de palabras y frases del lucumí.[208] La mayoría de los cubanos no entienden la lengua lucumí, salvo algunas palabras que se han filtrado al español cubano.[211] El lucumí deriva de la lengua yoruba, aunque desde el siglo XIX se ha vuelto «cada vez más fragmentada e ininteligible».[212] Al pasar del yoruba al lucumí, se olvidó la pronunciación yoruba de muchas palabras,[210] y a principios del siglo XXI algunos practicantes han estudiado la lengua yoruba para comprender mejor el significado original de las palabras lucumí.[213]

Los rituales tienen lugar en la casa templo,[214]casa de santos,[215]casa de religión[216]o ilé («casa»).[217] Esta casa suele ser el hogar personal de un santero o santera.[218] Suele tener una sala interior, el igbodu («bosquecillo sagrado del festival»), donde se celebran los rituales más importantes.[219] También hay una eyá aránla o sala, a menudo una sala de estar, donde se pueden realizar ritos semiprivados.[219] Otro espacio, el iban balo, o patio, se utiliza para ocasiones públicas, así como para el cultivo de plantas y el alojamiento de los animales que serán sacrificados.[219] La casa suele incluir un lugar donde se guarda la parafernalia ritual, instalaciones de cocina y espacios para que los visitantes duerman.[218]

La casa no sólo se refiere al edificio donde se celebran las ceremonias, sino también a la comunidad de practicantes que se reúnen allí.[218] En este sentido, muchas casas tienen un linaje que se remonta al siglo XIX, y algunos santeros y santeras pueden nombrrar a todos los practicantes que se han iniciado en ella.[218] En algunas ceremonias, se recitan los nombres de estos individuos, considerados como ancestros de la casa, en orden cronológico.[220] Aunque miembros de distintas casas suelen interactuar, cada una de ellas es en gran medida autónoma, lo que permite que haya variedad en sus prácticas.[221] En Cuba, es habitual que los practicantes de la santería se reúnan con regularidad[222] y se consideren como una familia:[223] la familia de santo.[224] Por el contrario, en una zona como Veracruz (México), muchos practicantes asisten a rituales grupales y luego se marchan, a veces sin volver a ver a sus copracticantes.[222]

La mayoría de las casas son establecidas por un santero o santera que ha atraído seguidores.[225] Un aprendiz es conocido como su ahijado o ahijada.[226] Se refieren a su santero/santera como padrino o madrina.[227] La relación entre los santeros/santeras y sus «ahijados» es fundamental para la organización social de la religión,[225] y los practicantes creen que cuantos más «ahijados» tenga una santera o santero, mayor será su aché.[166] Se espera que los «ahijados» contribuyan tanto con su trabajo como con sus finanzas a los actos que se celebran en la casa y, a cambio, el santero/santera les brinda asistencia para sus necesidades.[225] Dentro de la religión, ofender al padrino o madrina se considera también una ofensa al oricha que «gobierna la cabeza».[145] Los practicantes expresan su respeto tanto a su padrino o madrina como al orisha mediante una postración ritual, el moforibale, en la que inclinan la cabeza hacia el suelo.[228] La forma precisa del moforibale difiere según si el orisha personal del individuo es masculino o femenino.[229]

Altares

Una sopera con otanes que representan al orisha Yemaya, que se asocia con el mar; los altares de Yemaya suelen tener conchas marinas y parafernalia náutica..[230]
Altares o santuarios para los oricha suelen encontrarse tanto en el igbodu[231] como en los hogares de los practicantes.[232] En estos altares hay objetos sagrados, denominados fundamentos,[233] que se guardan en recipientes de porcelana, a menudo soperas.[234] Los fundamentos más importantes son las piedras denominadas otanes (sing. otán),[234] que se consideran la representación literal y simbólica de los orisha[235] y, por tanto, entidades vivas.[236] Se considera que son fuentes de aché,[237] y que los otanes más antiguos tienen más aché que los más jóvenes.[238]

Los practicantes recogen piedras del paisaje y luego utilizan la adivinación para determinar cuáles contienen un orisha y, de ser así, de qué oricha se trata.[239] A veces, algunos otanes presentan rasgos que los vinculan a un oricha concreto; por ejemplo, las piedras del océano se relacionan con Yemaya, los guijarros de río con Ochún y los fragmentos de meteorito con Changó.[91] Se considera que cada orisha prefiere un color y un número determinado de otanes en la sopera que se le dedica; Changó tiene seis o diez piedras negras, Obatala tiene ocho piedras blancas, mientras que Ochún prefiere cinco piedras amarillas.[240] Los nuevos otanes se someten a un rito de bautismo[237] en el que se les lava con osain (una mezcla de hierbas y agua), y se les «alimenta» con sangre de animales.[238] Cuando un iniciado recibe sus piedras, jura protegerlas y alimentarlas al menos una vez al año.[237]

Una bóveda, o mesa blanca, dispuesta para los espíritus de los muertos, en una casa de Trinidad, Cuba
Otro tipo de material que se coloca dentro de la sopera son las conchas de cauri; normalmente se añaden 18, aunque el número exacto varía en función del orisha a la que esté dedicada la sopera.[238] La sopera suele estar cubierta por una tela (el pañuelo) que se colorea de acuerdo con el orisha en cuestión.[241] Sobre la sopera se colocan a menudo collares, que también representan un orisha en particular. En el altar, las soperas van dispuestas en una jerarquía descendente dependiendo de a qué orisha esté dedicada cada una, con la de Obatala en la cima.[242]

Muchos altares contienen pocas o ninguna representación antropomórfica de los orisha,[243] aunque a menudo incluyen objetos asociados a ellos:[232] un hacha de madera para Changó o un abanico para Ochún, por ejemplo.[241] La creación de estos altares se considera costosa y requiere mucho tiempo.[241] Los materiales puede seleccionarse en función de los gustos del creyente; los antropólogos han observado a practicantes que han incluido en sus altares figuritas taoístas[244] o estatuas de magos.[245] A menudo se colocan alimentos y flores en el altar como ofrendas.[246] Aunque rara vez se incluyen en sus altares, los practicantes suelen tener estatuas de santos católicos en otros lugares de sus casas.[245]

Además de su altar a los orisha, muchos practicantes tienen altares reservados para los espíritus de los muertos.[247] Suelen consistir en una mesa cubierta de blanco conocida como bóveda,[248] derivada en parte de la Mesa Blanca del Espiritismo.[249] Las bóvedas suelen tener fotografías de familiares fallecidos, a los que se les hacen ofrendas;[250] ofrendas populares para los espíritus de los muertos incluyen siete vasos de agua,[157] un cafecito[251] y el aguardiente.[252] Muchos practicantes también consagran a sus antepasados familiares bajo el lavabo del baño. Este lugar se elige para que los antepasados puedan viajar entre los reinos de los vivos y los muertos a través del agua de las tuberías.[249]

Ofrendas y sacrificio de animales

Sacrificio de una gallina en un ritual de santería en 2017 en La Habana
Las ofrendas se denominan ebbó[253](o ebó),[254] y se ofrecen a los orisha, a espíritus ancestrales, al propio ori de la persona, y a veces a la tierra.[255] Estas ofrendas pueden consistir en fruta y otros alimentos, licor, flores, velas, dinero o animales sacrificados.[256] A menudo se recurre a la adivinación para determinar la naturaleza exacta de la ofrenda;[257] se supone que los iniciados deben realizar ofrendas con regularidad, y al menos una vez al año.[258] Ofrecidas para fortalecer a las fuerzas sobrenaturales, como agradecimiento o como súplica,[259] ayudan a formar una relación recíproca con estas entidades con la esperanza de recibir algo a cambio.[260] Si esto no se materializa, los practicantes pueden recurrir a varias explicaciones: que los detalles del ritual eran incorrectos, que el sacerdote o la sacerdotisa que realizó el rito carecía de suficiente aché, o que se ofreció el ébbo equivocado para la situación.[261]

Llevado a cabo por un matador,[262] el sacrificio de animales se denomina matanza.[263] Normalmente lo lleva a cabo un hombre,[264] y se prohíbe la participación de las mujeres que están menstruando.[166] Aves—incluyendo pintadas, pollos y palomas—suelen sacrificarse degolladas o con la cabeza retorcida y arrancada.[265] En rituales de mayor importancia, los sacrificios suelen ser de animales de cuatro patas.[108] Algunos practicantes describen la matanza de animales como un sustituto aceptable de los sacrificios humanos.[266] Se cree que los orisha y los espíritus «comen» la sangre de la víctima;[267] se considera que la fuerza vital de ésta se transfiere al orisha, reforzando así su aché.[268] A veces se entiende que un animal que lucha por evitar que lo maten tiene una fuerza especial que luego pasará al orisha.[268]

Una vez sacrificados, las cabezas cortadas de los animales pueden colocarse encima de la sopera perteneciente al oricha al que se ha dirigido el sacrificio.[269] Una vez descuartizado el cadáver, algunos de los órganos—conocidos como acheses—pueden cocinarse y ofrecerse al orisha;[270] otras partes serán consumidas por los practicantes.[271] Parte de la sangre puede recogerse y añadirse al omiero, una infusión de hierbas y agua.[262] Este líquido, que se cree que contiene mucho aché,[272] se utiliza para eliminar influencias malévolas y en ceremonias para bautizar herramientas rituales.[262] El sacrificio de animales en la santería ha sido motivo de preocupación para muchos no practicantes,[273] y a veces ha llevado a los adeptos a enfrentarse con la ley.[274] En el caso de 1993 de la iglesia del Lukumi Babalu Aye contra la ciudad de Hialeah, el Tribunal Supremo de EE. UU. dictaminó que las leyes sobre crueldad animal dirigidas específicamente a la santería eran inconstitucionales.[275]

Los «Iyabó» adoptan un nombre como santero y deben vestir de blanco durante ese primer año de purificación.
En la concepción santera, hacerse santo quiere decir asentarse su ángel de la guarda en su cabeza, es decir, tener a tu Orisha tutelar contigo ad eternum y la responsabilidad y compromiso que ello requiere. Se determina el Orisha tutelar previamente a hacerse santo, pues la ceremonia varía en función del Orisha que se va a coronar. A la persona que se le hace santo se le llama «iyawó» (también iyabó o yabó), título que recibirá solo por ese año en el cual debe con rigurosas y estrictas reglas y tras finalizar ese año de purificación ya se le llama santero u olorisha.

Para convertirse en santero o santera, el iniciador debe pasar por un proceso de iniciación intensivo[197] en el que la enseñanza de las habilidades rituales y el comportamiento moral se produce de manera informal y no verbal. La ceremonia del kari osha tiene una duración de 7 días en los cuales se renace, se reciben los orishas, se obtiene itá de santo y nombre de santo (nombre que identifica al santero dentro de la religión). Esa ceremonia la dirige el «Obá Ení Oriaté» que es un santero de amplios conocimiento y experiencia que lo hizo merecedor de ese títulos, aparte de los padrinos y otros santeros a los cuales se les asignan distintas tareas que permiten el oportuno desarrollo de la ceremonia. Para empezar, el iniciador pasa por lo que se llama un ritual de limpieza. El padrino del iniciador limpia la cabeza con determinadas hierbas y agua. Se debe escoger padrino («babalosha») o madrina («iyalosha»), ya que simbólicamente se nace de ellos y son quienes junto a la «oyugbona» guían el camino religioso del iniciado. El Padrino frota las hierbas y el agua en un patrón específico de movimientos en el cabello. Sin embargo, si una persona está ingresando a la Santería por la necesidad de curación, se someterá a la rogación de la cabeza (bendición de la cabeza), en la cual se aplica agua de coco y algodón en la cabeza.[276] Una vez limpiado, hay cuatro rituales de iniciación principales que el iniciador tendrá que realizar: obtener los elekes (collar de cuentas), recibir a Los Guerreros (Oddé, los orishas guerreros), hacer Ocha (Santo) y Asiento (ascender al trono).[195]

Ritual de obtención de los elekes

Mujer portando varios elekes (collares de cuentas).
El primer ritual se conoce como la adquisición de los collares de cuentas (conocidos como elekes); de acuerdo con de La Torre "los colores y patrones de las cuentas en los elekes serán los de la orichá que sirve como cabeza de la iyawo (novia) y ángel de la guarda, por lo que lo primero que debe hacerse es determinar quién es el orichá es. El collar de elekes se baña con una mezcla de hierbas, sangre de sacrificio y otras sustancias potentes y se administra a los iniciados.[195]

El iniciado más a menudo recibe el collar de las cinco oricha más poderosas y populares, ya que las cuentas multicolores de las elekes están modeladas para los Orishás primarios (Eleguá, Obatalá, Yemayá, Changó y Ochún), y sirven como un punto sagrado. de contacto con estos orishás. Cuando se recibe el collar, el iniciado debe inclinarse sobre una bañera y lavarse la cabeza con el olo orichá. Los elekes[276] son como estandartes sagrados para los Orishás y actúan como un signo de la presencia y protección del Orichá. Los elekes no se deben vestir durante el período de menstruación, ni durante el sexo ni al bañarse.[195]

Ritual de Medio Asiento

El segundo ritual importante es conocido como medio asiento, la creación de una imagen de la orichá Eleguá. El individuo pasará por una consulta con un santero, donde se revisará la vida, el pasado, el presente y el futuro de todos los destinatarios. Durante la consulta, el Santero determina qué camino de Eleguá recibirá el destinatario. Luego, basándose en sus hallazgos, elige los materiales que se utilizarán para construir la imagen de la Eleguá, una escultura que se utiliza para mantener a los espíritus malignos lejos de la casa del iniciador. Este ritual solo lo preparan los hombres cuando los orichás toman algo del espíritu "masculino" del Santero en el proceso.[277]

Ritual de recibimiento de los guerreros

El tercer ritual, conocido como recibir a los guerreros, es un ritual donde los iniciados reciben objetos de su padrino que representa a los guerreros; Herramientas de hierro para representar a Ogún; un arco de hierro y una flecha para representar a Ochosi; y un cáliz de hierro o plata coronado por un gallo para representar a Osun.[195] Este ritual comienza una relación formal y de por vida que el iniciado tendrá con estos Orichás, ya que los orichás dedican sus energías a proteger y proveer al iniciado en su camino.

Ritual de ascensión al trono

El último ritual del proceso de iniciación se conoce como asiento o ascender al trono, y es el ritual más importante y secreto de la santería, ya que es la ceremonia donde el o la iyawó renace. Este ritual es la culminación de los rituales anteriores y no se puede realizar a menos que los otros se hayan completado. El Asiento es un proceso de purificación y adivinación por el cual el iniciado se vuelve como un bebé recién nacido y comienza una nueva vida de crecimiento más profundo dentro de la fe.[195]

Los santeros, u «omorishas» son los que entran en contacto con la deidad, por ejemplo, a través de consultas con caracol o consulta espiritual, en sesiones espirituales según el desarrollo de cada persona.

El «oriaté» es la persona que dirige las ceremonias de la divinidad (orisha, santo) para que esta se haga de manera correcta y en ella solo trabajan santeros que estén consagrados; al nuevo iniciado y recién consagrado se le llama iyawo el cual ya ha pasado por rituales secretos.

Los «aleyos» son aquellas personas que tienen ciertos conocimientos, son creyentes, están interesados en las ceremonias así que tengan algunos secretos, los rituales no se deben exponer ante las personas no consagradas.

Bembé o Toque de Santos

Bembé en Mantilla, al sur de La Habana.
El bembé, o también toque de Santos,[278] es una fiesta religiosa en la que se canta y baila en honor a los Orishas. Se les alaba y se les implora a unirse a la fiesta. Se trata de una de las ceremonias más notables de la santería. Es esencial la presencia de instrumentos de percusión, como tambores batá, tumbadoras o tabales,[278] pues no se puede celebrar la ceremonia sin ritmos. Cada Orisha tiene un ritmo asociado, cosa que los tamborileros deben dominar para poder tocar conjuntamente. Tanto en la religión yoruba como en la santería el tambor es un objeto sagrado y la música se considera una dimensión mística para entrar en contacto con los Orisha. De hecho, el cante y baile en el bembé se consideran oraciones a los dioses.

Actualmente en muchos lugares de Cuba se celebran bembés en espacios públicos de pueblos y ciudades y están abiertos a que se una quien quiera. Por ejemplo, en Santiago de Cuba se celebra en octubre el Bembé general, el cual se considera una forma de limpieza espiritual colectiva.[279]

A veces el bembé acaba en un ritual de posesión o trance, por el cual una deidad Orisha se manifiesta en el bembé a través de un sacerdote santero. En principio, sólo los sacerdotes pueden ser poseídos, y sólo al Orisha al que se han consagrado. La posesión de un Orisha es motivo de gran alegría entre los participantes del bembé.

Consiste en el sacrificio de animales. La función de este ritual es la de resolver problemas de índole económica, problemas de salud o de estabilidad espiritual. En la santería, el sacrificio de animales está determinado por el rito de la adivinación, es decir, cada sacrificio responde a la solicitud, a través de los métodos de adivinación, de algún orishá o ancestro que requiere de uno o varios animales para poder resolver la situación que la persona consultada quiera solucionar.

En este sentido, el sacrificio no es un instrumento mediante el cual se pretenda redimir pecado alguno ya que en la santería no existe tal concepto. En la santería ni el hombre ni la mujer son concebidos como depositarios a priori de una o más culpas. El sacrificio, según la cosmovisión santera, es la vía mediante la cual puede ser restaurado un proceso o un ritmo que haya sido interrumpido. Los santeros aluden a que cada quien nace con un ritmo específico, un ritmo espiritual en la vida, que no debe ser interrumpido ya que si es así, entonces la persona no podrá realizarse plenamente. Sin embargo, cuando este ritmo ha sido trastocado, por las razones que hayan sido, entonces se requiere del sacrificio de un animal para restaurarlo. La sangre del animal, ofrecida a algún orishá o ancestro, es capaz de restaurar dicho ritmo porque ella está ligada directamente a un ritmo en el cuerpo del animal.

Este ritual ha sido criticado por los medios de comunicación occidentales.

También es muy común el uso de ofrendas que pueden varias entre comidas, frutas, flores dependiendo del Orisha que se esté agasajando.

En la cultura popular

Santeros en La Habana Vieja. La danza y la música son dos expresiones artísticas fundamentales en la cultura yoruba y en la santería. Los ritmos africanos marcaron para siempre la música de Cuba en géneros como el bolero, el son, la salsa, el guaguancó, la rumba o el jazz latino.
En la cultura popular cubana se pueden encontrar muchísimas referencias a la santería. La expresión «tener aché» en Cuba significa «tener suerte».[172] Al poder o energía de Olodumare se le conoce como aché, o ashé en yoruba. También está el dicho cubano «hacerse santo», que hace referencia a los Yawós (o «yabós»), los que se bautizan en la santería. Son fácilmente reconocibles porque durante su formación deben seguir un proceso riguroso de consagración para convertirse en santeros. Por ejemplo, vistiendo de blanco, alcanzar el máximo vínculo con su ángel de la guarda, el santo que los protege.[280]

Música

Celia Cruz, junto con La Sonora Matancera, homenajeó a lo largo de su discografía la cultura santera, con canciones como «Burundanga» (1953), «Plegaria a Laroyé» (1954) o «Yemayá» (1962) entre muchísimas más, culminando en el álbum recopilatorio Tributo a los Orishas de 1999. También el percusionista estadounidense de origen puertorriqueño Ray Barretto se consideraba «El hijo de Obatalá» (1973). También Celina y Reutilio, Merceditas Valdés, Candita Batista o Caridad Cuervo cantaron profusamente a Yemayá y a los demás orishas.

Quizá uno de los santos más populares entre los cubanos es Changó, el dios del trueno.[9] Tiene una especial importancia en la cultura musical puesto porque el objeto mitológico asociado a Changó son los tambores Batá.

Orishas en Varsovia (Polonia) en 2009
En 1999, Roldán González, Ruzzo Medina, Yotuel Romero y Livián Núñez (Flaco-Pro) se unieron para crear uno de los grupos de música más emblemáticos de la historia reciente de Cuba, los Orishas. De género hip hop latino, en sus canciones hay numerosas referencias a la tradición santera-yoruba.

También se hace referencia a la santería en la canción "Santería" en el álbum Sublime de la banda estadounidense del mismo nombre.

«La santería no está en consonancia con los cultos de la Iglesia católica. La razón principal es porque la santería tiene una cantidad de dioses, es decir, es politeísta (...) Ya desde sus bases la santería está en oposición a los principios del catolicismo (...) En la sagrada escritura [católica] tenemos en el libro del Deuteronomio 18:9[6] especifica que Nuestro Señor va en contra de esto.» - Padre Óscar Vélez, párroco de la Iglesia de Palo Verde (México)[7]

A divination tray on which cowrie shells rests, as are used for Ifá divination
Ifá or Fá is a geomantic system originating from Yorubaland in West Africa. It originates within the traditional religion of the Yoruba people. It is also practiced by followers of West African Vodun and certain African diasporic religions such as Cuban Santería.

According to Ifá teaching, the divinatory system is overseen by an orisha spirit, Orunmila, who is believed to have given it to humanity. Ifá is organised as an initiatory tradition, with an initiate called a babaláwo or bokɔnɔ. Traditionally, these are all-male, although women have been initiated in Cuba and Mexico. Its oracular literary body is made up of 256 volumes (signs) that are divided into two categories, the first called Ojú Odù or main Odù that consists of 16 chapters. The second category is composed of 240 chapters called Amúlù Odù (omoluos), these are composed through the combination of the main Odù. They use either the divining chain known as Ọ̀pẹ̀lẹ̀, or the sacred palm (Elaeis guineensis) or kola nuts called Ikin, on the wooden divination tray called Ọpọ́n Ifá to mathematically calculate which Odu to use for what problem.

Ifá is first recorded among the Yoruba people of West Africa. The expansion of Yoruba influence over neighbouring peoples resulted in the spread of Ifá, for instance to Fon people practising West African Vodun. As a result of the Atlantic slave trade, enslaved initiates of Ifá were transported to the Americas. There, Ifá survived in Cuba, where it developed an overlap with Afro-Cuban religious traditions such as Santería and Abakuá. Growing transnational links between Africa and the Americas during the 1970s also saw attempts by West African babalawos to train and initiate people in countries like Brazil and the United States.

Definitions

According to traditional lore, Ifâ began in the city of Ile-Ife in Yorubaland.[1] Since that point, its practice has spread throughout lower Nigeria and westward into coastal Benin and Togo and then in Ghana.[1] It has also been taken to the Americas, where it is practiced within some African diasporic religions.[1]

The term Ifá is the Yoruba language name for the practice. In the Fon language it is called Fá, and among the Ewe and Mina languages it is Afa.[1] The Yoruba system of Ifá is deemed more time consuming, and requires more sacrifices, than the Fá system among the Fon.[2] In the Fon-dominated Ouidah, therefore, some people think of Yoruba Ifá as being more potent than their own local system.[3] Some people who have been initiated into Fon-style Fá thus later go through additional ceremonies to be initiated into Yoruba-style Ifá.[4]

Theology

In Yorubaland, divination gives priests unreserved access to the teachings of Ọ̀rúnmìlà.[5] Among the Fon, Ọ̀rúnmìlà is known as Fá.[6] In the Fon language, fa literally means "coolness" and evokes the concepts of mildness, softness, peacefulness, and equilibrium.[7] This is deemed appropriate because the tutelary practice of the divination system, Fá, is thought to promote coolness and to dislike hot things.[7] Among the Yoruba, this concept of coolness is also important, but is referred to as tutu, a term bearing no linguistic associations with Ifá.[7]

In the West African religions that incorporate Ifá divination, the spirit-deity known among Yoruba people as Eshu-Elegba, Eshu, or Elegbara, is deemed the intermediate communicator relaying Ifá's will both to humanity and to other spirit-deities.[8] Among the Fon, Eshu is termed Legba, and among the Ewe and Mina, he is Elegy.[8] Ifá divination rites provide an avenue of communication to the spiritual realm and the intent of one's destiny.[9]

Among the Fon, it is the female spirit Gbădu who is regarded as the source of Fá's power.[10] She is deemed to be the wife of Fá.[11] Her presence is required for new initiations.[12] She is believed to offer significant protection for people but her veneration is thought dangerous unless a person is initiated.[12] It is for instance believed that women must be kept apart from her presence, for if they get near her they may be struck barren or die.[11]

System

Odù Ifá

Ifá consists of 256 binary signs.[13] The Yoruba term odù instead appears in Fon as a dù.[2]

In Fon, the sacred palm nuts are called fádékwín.[14] A "divining chain" is referred to in Yoruba as a òpèlè and in Fon as an akplɛ.[2] It may comprise eight halves of a nut, tied together.[15] The way in which it falls then reveals one of 256 possible signs.[15]

To perform the divination, the babalawo will often be seated on a mat.[16] Before casting the divining chain the diviner may sing to call forth Fá.[15] In Fon, the divining tray is called a fátɛ.[17] In West Africa, the quality of the fátɛ may indicate the babalawo's financial success; some who have a small client base may use only a plastic or cardboard tray, while those with access to greater funds may pay for an elaborate, purpose built wooden fátɛ.[18]

Another ritual object is known to the Yoruba as Ọpá Ọṣun and to the Fon as a fásɛn.[19] This consists of a metal staff, four to five feet tall, that is capped at the top with a metal disk and sometimes a metal rooster.[20] When a fásɛn is created, it is washed in specific leaves and the blood of 16 giant snails; this task is performed by women, secluded from the view of men.[21] Any chickens sacrificed to the fásɛn are only eaten by women.[21]

There are sixteen major books in the Odu Ifá literary corpus. When combined, there are a total of 256 Odu (a collection of sixteen, each of which has sixteen alternatives ⇔ 162, or 44) that are believed to reference all situations, circumstances, actions and consequences in life based on the uncountable ese (or "poetic tutorials") relative to the 256 Odu coding. These form the basis of traditional Yoruba spiritual knowledge and are the foundation of all Yoruba divination systems. Ifá proverbs, stories, and poetry are not written down. Rather, they are passed down orally from one babalawo to another.

Yoruba people consult Ifá for divine intervention and spiritual guidance.[22]

Among the Yoruba, divination trays are usually circular although can be quadrangular; conversely, this latter shape is most common among those trays used by Fon speakers.[23]

The Messenger sign of Ifá

In addition to the sixteen fundamental signs, Ifá divination includes a major sign, which is the combination of Ọse and Otura, from right to left (Ọse-Tura).

That sign must be written each time a ritual is performed: Ọse-Tura is the messenger and the carrier of the sacrifice. It is closely associated with the god Èṣù in the system of Ifá. That Messenger sign was known in Arab and Latin medieval geomancy as the Morning Star.[24]

Babalawos

A babalawo photographed in West Africa
An initiate of Ifá is called a babaláwo in Yoruba and a bokɔnɔ in Fon.[25]

Traditionally only heterosexual men are allowed to become babalawos,[26] with women and homosexual males being excluded.[27] Some gay men have nevertheless been initiated;[28] in both Cuba and the United States, for example, several babalawos have initiated their openly gay sons.[29] Moreover, despite the traditional prohibition on women taking on this role,[30] the scholar of religion Mary Ann Clark noted that by the early 21st century, female practitioners were "becoming institutionalized in some religious communities" in the United States, where they were known as either iyalawo (mother of secrets) or iyanifá (mother of Ifá).[31] Female practitioners have also been reported in Mexico.[32]

Four babalawos photographed in 2021
The restriction on female initiation is explained through the story that the òrìṣà Orula was furious that Yemayá, his wife, had used his tabla divining board and subsequently decided to ban women from ever touching it again.[33] Among the Fon, one tradition maintains that women do not need to be initiated into the traditions of the female spirit Gbădu—who is Fá's wife—because they already have the power of creation within them.[11] According to Fon diviners, keeping women and Gbădu apart ensures a conceptual state of coolness.[11] This extends to a taboo on women eating any of the meat from animals sacrificed to Gbădu.[10]

Once an individual is initiated as a babalawo they are given a pot containing various items, including palm nuts, which is believed to be the literal embodiment of Orula.[34] Babalawos provide offerings to Orula, including animal sacrifices and gifts of money.[35] In Cuba, Ifá typically involves the casting of consecrated palm nuts to answer a question. The babalawo then interprets the message of the nuts depending on how they have fallen; there are 256 possible configurations in the Ifá system, which the babalawo is expected to have memorised.[36] Individuals approach the babalawo seeking guidance, often on financial matters, at which the diviner will consult Orula through the established divinatory method.[37] In turn, those visiting the babalawos pay them for their services.[38]

Initiation

Initiation as a babalawo requires a payment to the initiator and is typically regarded as highly expensive.[39] In Benin, Fá initiation usually takes less than a week, whereas initiations into the cults of other vodún may take several weeks or months.[40] A distinction is made between an initiation that called yǐ Fá ("to receive Fá"), which is often seen as a "first initiation" into Fá's veneration, which offers his protection, and the priestly initiation, at which a person is said to Fázùnyí ("receive Fá's forest").[41]

Among the Fon, the sacred forest of Fá is called fázùn;[15] this is differentiated from ordinary forest by shredded palm fronds, known in Fon as asàn and in Yoruba as màrìwò.[20] It will be here that new initiates are led; they will be accompanied with animals for sacrifice, by existing initiates singing praise songs, and by a person leading the way carrying a fásɛn.[19] A figurine of the spirit Lɛgbá may be brought along for the ritual, invoking this deity to guard the initiates' passage into the forest. Offerings will be given to him, and divination employed to check that he accepts them.[20]

In the forest, the new initiate will be given a kola nut to eat, to bring him in communion with Fá.[42] All present may then place their hands together on the fásɛn, to which a rooster may then be sacrificed.[43] The newcomer's eyes will be washed in a herbal mixture called Gbădùsin.[44] The neophyte will then be blindfolded and then led into the sacred grove of the fázùn, where the secret teachings of Fá are revealed to them.[17] Divination will be used to determine under which of the 256 signs their priesthood will be born. The selected sign indicates to which spirits they should pay particular attention and to which taboos they must observe.[25] This may involve avoiding eating certain foods, wearing certain colors, or engaging in specific actions.[45] The initiate's head will then be shaved as a symbol of their initiation and they will be ritually bathed and wrapped in white cloth.[46] A celebration follows, in which a goat may be sacrificed to Fá and the participants eat its meat.[46]

The initiate may receive a small bundle, the kpɔli, containing secret ingredients corresponding to their personal du.[47] They may also receive a small vessel to house their palm nuts and a small stone, the ken, to protect them from witchcraft.[47]

History

West African origins

The 16-principle system has its earliest history in West Africa. Each Niger–Congo-speaking ethnic group which practices it has their own myth of origin; Yoruba religion suggests that it was founded by Orunmila in Ilé-Ifẹ̀ when he initiated himself and then he initiated his students, Akoda and Aseda. According to the book The History of the Yorubas from the Earliest of Times to the British Protectorate (1921) by Nigerian historian Samuel Johnson and Obadiah Johnson, it was Arugba, the mother of Onibogi, the 8th Alaafin of Oyo, who introduced Oyo to Ifá in the late 1400s. She initiated the Alado of Ado and conferred on him the right to initiate others. The Alado, in turn, initiated the priests of Oyo and that was how Ifá came to be in the Oyo empire.[48]

Ifá originated among the Yoruba peoples.[4] The linguist Wande Abimbola argued that Ifá probably derived from a simpler divinatory system, diloggun; this contrasts with the belief of some babalawos that diloggun was based on Ifá.[49]

Between circa 1727 and 1823, the kingdom of Dahomey was a vassal state of the Yoruba-dominated Oyo Empire to the east, thus resulting in much religious interchange.[50] In this period, the Fon people of Dahomey adopted Ifá as well as the Orò and Egungun cults from the Yoruba.[50] Ifá was present in Dahomey by the reign of its fifth ruler, Tegbesú, who ruled from c.1732 to 1774, and was well established at the royal palace by the reign of Gezò, which lasted from 1818 to 1858.[51]

According to William Bascom,[52] "an indication of the importance of Ifá to the [Yoruba] religious system as a whole is the fact that the most striking religious syncretisms resulting from European contact are to be found in a church established in Lagos in 1934, the Ijọ Ọ̀rúnmila Adulawọ, which was founded on the premise that the teachings of Ifa constitute the Yoruba Bible." It was also set up in Porto-Novo (Benin) the same year.[53] According to Erwan Dianteill,[54] the Church of Ifá is still active in 2024, in Nigeria and Benin, with around 2000 followers in Lagos, Porto-Novo and Cotonou.

Of the foreigners coming to West Africa for initiation into Vodún, the largest group sought initiation into Fá.[55]

Ifá in Cuba

In Cuba, Ifá came to be used in the Afro-Cuban religion of Santería.[56] There, it is the most complex and prestigious divinatory system used in the religion.[57] The two are closely linked, sharing the same mythology and conception of the universe,[58] with Orula or Ọ̀rúnmila having a prominent place within Santería.[59] In Cuba, Ifá nevertheless also retains a separate existence from Santería.[59] Many Cuban babalawos are also santeros, or male initiates of Santería,[60] although it is not uncommon for babalawos to perceive themselves as being superior to santeros.[61] Although the presence of babalawos is not required for Santería ceremonies, they often attend in their capacity as diviners.[62] Other Cuban babalawos have been initiates of the Abakuá society.[63]

At the time of the Cuban Revolution in 1959, there were an estimated 200 babalawos active on Cuba; by the 1990s, Cuban babalawos were claiming that they numbered tens of thousands on the island.[63] In the 1980s, Cuban babalawos created the organisation Ifá Yesterday, Ifá Today, Ifá Tomorrow, the first Cuban institution to represent the priesthood of an Afro-Cuban religion.[64] Following the Soviet Union's collapse in the 1990s, Cuba's government declared that the island was entering a "Special Period" in which new economic measures would be necessary. As part of this, it selectively supported Afro-Cuban and Santería traditions, partly out of a desire to boost tourism;[65] priests of Santería, Ifá, and Palo all took part in government-sponsored tours for foreigners desiring initiation into such traditions.[66]

Ifá in the United States

Cuban migrants took Ifá to the United States. There, during the 1960s, a small group of babalawos dominated the Santería scene in New York. Their dominance was challenged by new Cuban migrants who arrived between 1965 and 1973 and who, although initiated santeros and santeras, were not babalawos.[67] The ethnomusicologist María Teresa Vélez noted that "two types of ocha house arose: those that still relied on the babalaos and did not question any of their prerogatives, and those that became independent of the babalaos for most of their ritual activities," with these latter houses often being run by women.[68]

In 1978, Ifá ceremonies took place in Miami, Florida, overseen by the Nigerian babalawo Ifayẹmi Elébùìbọn Awise of Osogbo. He was assisted in this by two Cuban babalawos, Luis Fernández-Pelón and José-Miguel Gómez, both of whom were Abakuá members.[63] In the 1980s, the Chicago-based Philip and Vassa Newmarket established their Ifa Foundation of North and Latin America. Departing from established tradition, they offered "bloodless" initiations that welcomed those who were unwilling to engage in animal sacrifice.[69] Claims have been made that the first woman initiated into Ifá was the Jewish American Dr. D'Haifa Odufora Ifatogun Ina Arara Agbaye.[70]

Ifá in Brazil

Although surviving in Cuban Santería, Ifá did not remain part of a Brazilian religion that owed much to Yoruba traditions, Candomblé.[71] In Candomblé, dilogun instead forms the primary method of divination employed by its initiates.[72] One of the earliest practitioners of Ifá in Brazil was the French ethnographer Pierre Verger, who had become a babalawo in West Africa and who was also involved in Candomblé.[73]

As a result of growing links between Brazil and Nigeria, in the 1970s various educational efforts to promote understandings of Yoruba culture were established in Brazilian cities. This included the Yoruba Culture Research and Study Centre, founded in 1977 by Fernandes Portugal, and which brought in Nigerian teachers to run a course teaching Ifá.[74] The closing ceremony took place in January 1978, attended by 14 students who were granted the status of omo (son of) Ifá.[75] One of these pupils, a Candomblé initiate named José Nilton Vianna Reis (Torodê de Ogun), later went on to become a babalawo nine years later, before setting out his own Ifá teaching course in 1984.[76]

Reception

In 2008, UNESCO added Ifá to its list of the "Masterpieces of the Oral and Intangible Heritage of Humanity".[4][77]

Vodou (or Voodoo) is a complex, syncretic religion originating from West African traditions and Catholicism, practiced primarily in Haiti, focused on serving spirits (lwa) for health, guidance, and good fortune through rituals, dance, and prayer, and involves belief in one distant God and many spirits, ancestral veneration, and a deep connection to nature. It's a living, oral tradition that emphasizes community, balance, and restoring spiritual energy, often misunderstood due to historical misconceptions and negative portrayals.

Core Beliefs & Practices
One God & Many Spirits: A supreme, distant God created the world, communicating through various powerful spirits called lwa, who act as intermediaries, similar to Catholic saints.
Lwa (Spirits): Each lwa governs specific aspects of life (love, money, protection) and forms relationships with devotees, offering help in exchange for service.
Ancestors: Deceased ancestors are active participants in the lives of the living, making ancestor veneration crucial.
Nature & Energy: The natural world is sacred, and life involves maintaining balance and equilibrium through the understanding and flow of energy.
Rituals & Worship: Practices include drumming, singing, dancing, trance possession, offerings, and prayers, often in community settings.
Origins & History
West African Roots: Derived from traditions of the Fon, Ewe, and Yoruba peoples of modern-day Benin and Ghana, with the word "Vodou" meaning "spirit" or "god".
Syncretism: Enslaved Africans blended these beliefs with Roman Catholicism, incorporating Catholic hymns, saints (repurposed as lwa), and rituals into their worship.
Resistance & Resilience: Vodou served as a vital force for identity, resistance, and liberation, playing a significant role in the Haitian Revolution.
Misconceptions vs. Reality
Misconceptions: Often portrayed as dark magic, witchcraft, or primitive superstition, largely due to colonial and anthropological biases.
Reality: A rich, complex, and organized system of healing, philosophy, and community support, focused on fostering harmony between humans, spirits, and nature.

Voodoo’s “Day of the Dead” is known as Fèt Gede in Haiti, an annual festival held around November 1stto honor ancestral spirits. Fèt Gede includes Vodou rituals, such as appeasing the spirits of the dead, known as Gede, and venerating Iwa like Baron Samedi. It is a blend of Vodou, Catholicism, music, dance and offerings like flowers, bread, and rum. The festival can include rituals where priests or priestesses may become possessed by Gede spirits, sometimes involving shaking.@‘

As dawn breaks on November 1, Haiti awakens to the thunder of drums and the sharp scent of piman-laced clairin rum. #FêteGédé, the nation’s raw and raucous #Vodou festival of the dead, officially begins and runs through November 2 in a nationwide ritual that transforms grief into defiance and cemeteries into carnival grounds. Vodouisants gather at cemeteries, bringing offerings of rum, food, and flowers for the spirits.
Often called Haiti’s Day of the Dead, #FêteGédé stands apart from its Mexican counterpart with its unfiltered blend of reverence and revelry. At the heart of the celebration are the Gede, a family of loa, Vodou spirits who rule over death, fertility, healing, and biting satire. Leading the charge is #Baron amedi, the top-hatted, cigar-chomping guardian of graveyards clad in a black tailcoat and dark sunglasses, controlling the thin veil between worlds. Beside him stands #PapaGede, revered as the first man to ever die, eternally posted at life’s crossroads with

The Fowler invited oungan (Vodou priest) and Haitian art specialist Jean-Daniel Lafontant to assemble this altar using works from the museum's collection and it is now on view in our permanent collection gallery. In Vodou, altars give aesthetic form and presence to a single lwa (spirit) or a group of related lwa, creating intersections between the sacred and the everyday. With this altar, Lafontant honors Petwo, a family associated with war and transformation: "Petwo was born out of the chaos and hardship of slavery, and that today we maybe need Petwo's energy because the world is in turmoil." Altar components range from powerful, precious, and singular to common, mass-produced, and perishable all contributing to and generating a sensory expression of divinity. Here, we see bottles typically containing medicine or liquor favored by the lwa, flags, pakète (spirit-charged packets), lamps, sacred rattles, and ritual regalia and offerings to the lwa. They are conduits of reciprocity betw

Haitian Vodou[a] (/ˈvoʊduː/) is an African diasporic religion that developed in Haiti between the 16th and 19th centuries. It arose through a process of syncretism between several traditional religions of West and Central Africa and Catholicism. There is no central authority in control of the religion and much diversity exists among practitioners, who are known as Vodouists, Vodouisants, or Serviteurs.

Vodou teaches the existence of a transcendent creator divinity, Bondye, under whom are spirits known as lwa. Typically deriving their names and attributes from traditional West and Central African deities, they are equated with Catholic saints. The lwa divide into different groups, the nanchon ("nations"), most notably the Rada and the Petwo, about whom various myths and stories are told. This theology has been labelled both monotheistic and polytheistic. An initiatory tradition, Vodouists commonly venerate the lwa at an ounfò (temple), run by an oungan (priest) or manbo (priestess). Alternatively, Vodou is also practised within family groups or in secret societies like the Bizango. A central ritual involves practitioners drumming, singing, and dancing to encourage a lwa to possess one of their members and thus communicate with them. Offerings to the lwa, and to spirits of the dead, include fruit, liquor, and sacrificed animals. Several forms of divination are utilized to decipher messages from the lwa. Healing rituals and the preparation of herbal remedies and talismans also play a prominent role.

Vodou developed among Afro-Haitian communities amid the Atlantic slave trade of the 16th to 19th centuries. Its structure arose from the blending of the traditional religions of those enslaved West and Central Africans brought to the island of Hispaniola, among them Kongo, Fon, and Yoruba. There, it absorbed influences from the culture of the French colonialists who controlled the colony of Saint-Domingue, most notably Roman Catholicism but also Freemasonry. Many Vodouists were involved in the Haitian Revolution of 1791 to 1801 which overthrew the French colonial government, abolished slavery, and transformed Saint-Domingue into the republic of Haiti. The Catholic Church left for several decades following the Revolution, allowing Vodou to become Haiti's dominant religion. In the 20th century, growing emigration spread Vodou abroad. The late 20th century saw growing links between Vodou and related traditions in West Africa and the Americas, such as Cuban Santería and Brazilian Candomblé, while some practitioners influenced by the Négritude movement have sought to remove Catholic influences.

Most Haitians practice both Vodou and Catholicism, seeing no contradiction in pursuing the two different systems simultaneously. Smaller Vodouist communities exist elsewhere, especially among Haitian diasporas in Cuba and the United States. Both in Haiti and abroad Vodou has spread beyond its Afro-Haitian origins and is practiced by individuals of various ethnicities. Having faced much criticism through its history, Vodou has been described as one of the world's most misunderstood religions.

Definitions and terminology

Vodou is a religion.[6] More specifically, scholars have characterised it as an Afro-Haitian religion,[7] and as Haiti's "national religion".[8] Its main structure derives from the African traditional religions of West and Central Africa which were brought to Haiti by enslaved Africans between the 16th and 19th centuries.[9] Of these, the greatest influences came from the Fon and Bakongo peoples.[10] On the island, these African religions mixed with the iconography of European-derived traditions such as Catholicism and Freemasonry,[11] taking the form of Vodou around the mid-18th century.[12] In combining varied influences, Vodou has often been described as syncretic,[13] a product of creolization,[14] or alternatively as a "symbiosis".[15]

As formed in Haiti, Vodou represented "a new religion",[16] "a creolized New World system",[17] one that differs in many ways from African traditional religions.[18] The scholar Leslie Desmangles therefore called it an "African-derived tradition",[19] Ina J. Fandrich termed it a "neo-African religion",[20] and Markel Thylefors called it an "Afro-Latin American religion".[21] Several other African diasporic religions found in the Americas formed in a similar way, and owing to their shared origins in West African traditional religion, Vodou has been characterized as a "sister religion" of Cuban Santería and Brazilian Candomblé.[22]

Vodou has no central institutional authority,[23] no single leader,[24] and no developed body of doctrine.[25] It thus has no orthodoxy,[26] no central liturgy,[27] and no formal creed.[28] Developing over the course of several centuries,[29] it has changed over time.[30] It displays variation at both the regional and local level[31]—including variation between Haiti and the Haitian diaspora[32]—as well as among different congregations.[33] It is practiced domestically, by families on their land, but also by congregations meeting communally,[34] with the latter termed "temple Vodou".[35]

In Haitian culture, religions are not generally deemed totally autonomous. Many Haitians thus practice both Vodou and Roman Catholicism,[36] with Vodouists usually regarding themselves as Roman Catholics.[37] In Haiti, some Vodouists have also practiced Protestantism,[38] Mormonism,[39] or Freemasonry;[40] in Cuba they have involved themselves in Santería,[41] and in the United States with modern Paganism.[42] Vodou has also absorbed elements from other contexts; in Cuba, some Vodouists have adopted elements from Spiritism.[43] Influenced by the Négritude movement, other Vodouists have sought to remove Roman Catholic and other European influences from their practice of Vodou.[44]

Terminology

In English, Vodou's practitioners are termed Vodouists;[45] in French and Haitian Creole, they are called Vodouisants[46] or Vodouyizan.[47] Another term for adherents is sèvitè (serviteurs, "devotees"),[48] reflecting their self-description as people who sèvi lwa ("serve the lwa"), the supernatural beings that play a central role in Vodou.[49]

Many words used in the religion derive from the Fon language of West Africa;[50] this includes the word Vodou itself.[51] First recorded in the 1658 Doctrina Christiana,[52] the Fon word Vôdoun was used in the West African kingdom of Dahomey to signify a spirit or deity.[53] In Haitian Creole, Vodou came to designate a specific style of dance and drumming,[54] before outsiders to the religion adopted it as a generic term for much Afro-Haitian religion.[55] The word Vodou now encompasses "a variety of Haiti's African-derived religious traditions and practices",[56] incorporating "a bundle of practices that practitioners themselves do not aggregate".[57] Vodou is thus a term primarily used by scholars and outsiders to the religion;[57] many practitioners describe their belief system with the term Ginen, which especially denotes a moral philosophy and ethical code regarding how to live and to serve the spirits.[32]

Vodou is the common spelling for the religion among scholars, in official Haitian Creole orthography, and by the United States Library of Congress.[58] Some scholars prefer the spellings Vodoun, Voudoun, or Vodun,[59] while in French the spellings vaudou[60] or vaudoux also appear.[61] The spelling Voodoo, once common, is now generally avoided by practitioners and scholars when referring to the Haitian religion.[62] This is both to avoid confusion with Louisiana Voodoo, a related but distinct tradition,[63] and to distinguish it from the negative connotations that the term Voodoo has in Western popular culture.[64]

Beliefs

Bondye and the lwa

Vodou is monotheistic,[65] teaching the existence of a single supreme God.[66] This entity is called Bondye or Bonié,[67] a name deriving from the French term Bon Dieu

("Good God").[68] Another term for this God—borrowed from Freemasonry[40]—is the Gran Mèt.[69] For Vodouists, Bondye is the ultimate source of power,[70] the creator of the universe,[71] and the maintainer of cosmic order.[72] Haitians frequently use the phrase si Bondye vle ("if Bondye wishes"), suggesting a belief that all things occur in accordance with this divinity's will.[73] Vodouists regard Bondye as being transcendent and remote;[74] as the God is uninvolved in human affairs,[75] they see little point in approaching it directly.[76] While Vodouists often equate Bondye with the Christian God,[77] Vodou does not incorporate belief in a powerful antagonist that opposes the supreme being akin to the Christian notion of Satan.[78]

Vodou has also been characterized as polytheistic.[76] It teaches the existence of beings called the lwa,[79] a term varyingly translated into English as "spirits", "gods", or "geniuses".[80] These lwa are also known as the mystères, anges, saints, and les invisibles,[48] and are sometimes equated with the angels of Christian cosmology.[77] Vodou teaches that there are over a thousand lwa.[81] Serving as Bondye's intermediaries,[82] they communicate with humans through their dreams or by directly possessing them.[83] Vodouists believe the lwa are capable of offering people help, protection, and counsel in return for ritual service.[84] Each lwa has its own personality,[48] and is associated with specific colors,[85] days of the week,[86] and objects.[48] Particular lwa are also associated with specific human family lineages.[87] These spirits are not seen as moral exemplars for practitioners to imitate.[88] The lwa can be either loyal or capricious in their dealings with their devotees;[48] they are easily offended, for instance if offered food they dislike.[89] When angered, the lwa are believed to remove their protection from their devotees, or to inflict misfortune, illness, or madness on an individual.[90]

Although there are exceptions, most lwa derive their names from the Fon and Yoruba languages and originated as deities venerated in West or Central Africa.[91] New lwa are nevertheless added to the pantheon, with both talismans and certain humans thought capable of becoming lwa,[92] in the latter case through their strength of personality or power.[93] Vodouists often refer to the lwa living in the sea or in rivers,[86] or alternatively in Ginen,[87] a term encompassing a generalized understanding of Africa as the ancestral land of the Haitian people.[94]

The nanchon

A painting of the lwa Danbala, a serpent, by Haitian artist Hector Hyppolite. Hyppolite was himself an oungan[95]

The lwa divide into nanchon or "nations".[96] This classificatory system derives from the way in which enslaved Africans were divided into "nations" upon their arrival in Haiti, usually based on their African port of departure rather than their ethno-cultural identity.[48] The term fanmi (family) is sometimes used synonymously with nanchon or alternatively as a sub-division of the latter category.[97] It is often claimed that there are 17 nanchon,[98] of which the Rada and the Petwo are the largest and most dominant.[99]

The Rada lwa are seen as being 'cool'; the Petwo lwa as 'hot'.[100] This means that the Rada are dous or doux, or sweet-tempered, while the Petwo are lwa cho, indicating that they can be forceful or violent and are associated with fire.[101] Whereas the Rada are generally righteous, their Petwo counterparts are more morally ambiguous and associated with issues like money.[102] The Rada owe more to Dahomeyan and Yoruba influences;[103] their name probably comes from Arada, a city in the Dahomey kingdom of West Africa.[104] The Petwo derive largely from Kongo religion,[105] although also exhibit Dahomeyan and creolised influences.[106] Some lwa exist andezo or en deux eaux, meaning that they are "in two waters" and are served in both Rada and Petwo rituals.[107]

Vodou teaches that there are over a thousand lwa,[81] although certain ones are especially widely venerated.[108] In Rada ceremonies, the first lwa saluted is Papa Legba, also known as Legba.[109] Depicted as a feeble old man wearing rags and using a crutch,[110] Papa Legba is the protector of gates and fences and thus of the home, as well as of roads, paths, and crossroads.[111] In Petwo rites, the first lwa invoked is usually Mèt Kalfou.[112] The second lwa usually greeted are the Marasa or sacred twins.[113] In Vodou, every nanchon has its own Marasa,[114] reflecting a belief that twins have special powers.[115] Another important lwa is Agwe, also known as Agwe-taroyo, who is associated with aquatic life and is the protector of ships and fishermen.[116] Agwe is believed to rule the sea with his consort, La Sirène.[117] She is a mermaid, and is sometimes described as Èzili of the Waters because she is believed to bring good luck and wealth from the sea.[118] Also given the name Èzili is Èzili Freda or Erzuli Freda, the lwa of love and luxury who personifies feminine beauty and grace,[119] and Ezili Dantor, who takes the form of a peasant woman.[120]

Azaka is the lwa of crops and agriculture,[121] usually addressed as "Papa" or "Cousin".[122] His consort is the female lwa Kouzinn.[123] Loco is the lwa of vegetation, and because he is seen to give healing properties to various plant species is considered the lwa of healing too.[124] Ogou is a warrior lwa,[125] associated with weapons.[126] Sogbo is a lwa associated with lightning,[127] while his companion, Bade, is associated with the wind.[128] Danbala is a serpent lwa and is associated with water, being believed to frequent rivers, springs, and marshes;[129] he is one of the most popular deities in the pantheon.[130] Danbala and his consort Ayida-Weddo are often depicted as a pair of intertwining snakes.[129] The Simbi are understood as the guardians of fountains and marshes.[131]

Usually seen as a fanmi rather than a nanchon,[132] the Gede are associated with the realm of the dead.[133] The head of the family is Baron Samedi ("Baron Saturday");[134] he is associated with the phallus, the skull, and the graveyard cross,[135] the latter used to mark out his presence in a Haitian cemetery.[136] His consort is Gran Brigit,[137] who has authority over cemeteries and is mother to many of the other Gede.[138]

The Gede regularly satirise the ruling authorities,[139] and are welcomed to rituals as they are thought to bring merriment.[133] The Gede's symbol is an erect penis,[140] while the banda dance associated with them involves sexual-style thrusting,[141] and those possessed by these lwa typically make sexual innuendos.[142]

The lwa and the saints

Most lwa are associated with specific Roman Catholic saints.[143] These particular links rely on analogies between the respective functions of these figures;[144] Azaka, the lwa of agriculture, is for instance associated with Saint Isidore the farmer.[145] Similarly, because he is understood as the "key" to the spirit world, Papa Legba is typically associated with Saint Peter, who is traditionally depicted holding keys in Roman Catholic imagery.[146] The lwa of love and luxury, Èzili Freda, is associated with Mater Dolorosa.[147] Danbala the serpent is often equated with Saint Patrick, who is traditionally depicted with snakes, or with Moses, whose staff turned into serpents according to the Book of Exodus.[148] The Marasa, or sacred twins, are typically equated with the twin saints Cosmos and Damian.[149]

Vodouists may originally have adopted the Roman Catholic saints to conceal lwa worship when the latter was illegal during the colonial period.[150] By at least the late 20th century, many Vodouists came to express genuine devotion to the Roman Catholic saints,[151] with the scholar Marc A. Christophe stating that most modern Vodouists genuinely see the saints and lwa as one, reflecting Vodou's "all-inclusive and harmonizing characteristics".[152] Many Vodouists possess chromolithographic prints of the saints,[151] while images of these Christian figures can also be found on temple walls,[153] and on the drapo flags used in Vodou ritual.[154] Vodouists also often adopt and reinterpret biblical stories and theorise about the nature of Jesus of Nazareth.[155] Catholic and Vodou identity is sufficiently intertwined that a Haitian proverb maintains that "pou sevi lwa yo se pou'w bon katolik" ("you have to be a good Catholic to serve the spirits").[156]

Soul and afterlife

Vodou holds that Bondye created humanity in its image, fashioning humans from water and clay.[157] It teaches the existence of a soul, usually called the nanm,[158] or sometimes the espri,[159] which is divided in two parts.[160] One of these is the ti bonnanj ("little good angel"), understood as the conscience that allows an individual to engage in self-reflection and self-criticism. The other part is the gwo bonnanj ("big good angel") and this constitutes the psyche, source of memory, intelligence, and personhood.[161] Both parts are believed to reside within an individual's head,[162] although the gwo bonnanj is thought capable of leaving the head and travelling while a person sleeps.[163]

Vodouists believe that every individual is connected to a specific lwa, regarded as their mèt tèt (master of the head).[164] They believe that this lwa informs the individual's personality.[165] Vodou holds that the identity of a person's tutelary lwa can be identified through divination or by consulting lwa when they possess other humans.[166] Some of the religion's priests and priestesses are deemed to have "the gift of eyes", capable of seeing the identity of a person's tutelary lwa.[167]

Vodou holds that Bondye has preordained the time of everyone's death,[168] but does not teach the existence of an afterlife realm akin to the Christian ideas of heaven and hell.[169] Instead, a common belief is that at bodily death, the gwo bonnanj join the Ginen, or ancestral spirits, while the ti bonnanj proceeds to face judgement before Bondye.[170] This idea of judgement is more common in urban areas, having been influenced by Roman Catholicism, while in the Haitian mountains it is more common for Vodouists to believe that the ti bonnanj dissolves into the navel of the earth nine days after death.[171] The land of the Ginen is often identified as being located beneath the sea, under the earth, or above the sky.[172] Some Vodouists believe that the gwo bonnanj stays in the land of the Ginen for a year and a day before being absorbed into the Gede family.[173] However, Vodouists usually distinguish the spirits of the dead from the Gede proper, for the latter are lwa.[174] Vodou also teaches that the dead continue to participate in human affairs,[175] with these spirits often complaining that they suffer from hunger, cold, and damp,[176] and thus requiring sacrifices from the living.[76]

Morality, ethics, and gender roles

Vodou ethical standards correspond to its sense of cosmological order,[72] with a belief in the interdependence of things playing a role in Vodou approaches to ethical issues.[177] Serving the lwa is central to Vodou and its moral codes reflect the reciprocal relationship that practitioners have with these spirits;[178] for Vodouists, virtue is maintained by ensuring a responsible relationship with the lwa.[88] Vodou also promotes a belief in destiny, although individuals are still deemed to have freedom of choice.[179] This view of destiny has been interpreted as encouraging a fatalistic outlook,[180] something that the religion's critics, especially from Christian backgrounds, have argued has discouraged Vodouists from improving their society.[181] This has been extended into an argument that Vodou is responsible for Haiti's poverty,[182] a view that in turn has been accused of being rooted in European colonial prejudices towards Africans.[183]

A vèvè pattern designed to invoke Papa Legba, one of the main lwa spirits worshipped in Haitian Vodou

Although Vodou permeates every aspect of its adherent's lives,[184] it offers no prescriptive code of ethics.[185] Rather than being rule-based, Vodou morality is deemed contextual to the situation,[186] with no clear binary division between good and evil.[187] Vodou reflects people's everyday concerns, focusing on techniques for mitigating illness and misfortune;[188] doing what one needs to in order to survive is considered a high ethic.[189] Among Vodouists, a moral person is regarded as someone who lives in tune with their character and that of their tutelary lwa.[186] In general, acts that reinforce Bondye's power are deemed good; those that undermine it are seen as bad.[72] Maji, meaning the use of supernatural powers for self-serving and malevolent ends, are usually thought bad.[190] The term is quite flexible; it is usually used to denigrate other Vodouists, although some practitioners have used it as a self-descriptor in reference to Petwo rites.[191]

The extended family is of importance in Haitian society,[192] with Vodou reinforcing family ties,[193] and emphasising respect for the elderly.[194] Although there are accounts of male Vodou priests mistreating their female followers,[195] in the religion women can also lay claim to moral authority as social and spiritual leaders.[196] Vodou is also considered sympathetic to gay people,[197] with many gay and bisexual individuals holding status as Vodou priests and priestesses,[198] and some groups having largely gay congregations.[199] Some Vodouists state that the lwa determine a person's sexual orientation.[200] The lwa Èzili Dantò is sometimes regarded as a lesbian,[201] and forms of Èzili are also seen as the patron of masisi (gay men).[202]

Practices

The anthropologist Alfred Métraux described Vodou as "a practical and utilitarian religion".[86] Its practices largely revolve around interactions with the lwa,[203] and incorporate song, drumming, dance, prayer, spirit possession, and animal sacrifice.[204] Practitioners gather together for sèvices (services) in which they commune with the lwa.[205] Ceremonies for a particular lwa often coincide with the feast day of the Roman Catholic saint which that lwa is associated with.[206] The mastery of ritual forms is considered imperative in Vodou.[207] The purpose of ritual is to echofe ("heat things up"), thus bringing about change, whether that be to remove barriers or to facilitate healing.[208] Ritual activities are often termed travay (work).[209]

Secrecy is important in Vodou.[210] It is an initiatory tradition,[211] operating through a system of graded induction or initiation.[102] When an individual agrees to serve a lwa, it is deemed a lifelong commitment.[212] Vodou has a strong oral culture, and its teachings are primarily disseminated through oral transmission,[213] although many practitioners began to use texts after they appeared in the mid-20th century.[214] The terminology used in Vodou ritual is called langaj.[215] Unlike in Santería and Candomblé, which employ Yoruba as a liturgical language not understood by most practitioners, in Vodou the liturgies are predominantly in Haitian Creole, the everyday language of most Vodouists.[216]

Oungan and Manbo

Male priests are referred to as an oungan, alternatively spelled houngan or hungan,[217] or a prèt Vodou ("Vodou priest").[218] Priestesses are termed manbo, alternatively spelled mambo.[219] Oungan numerically dominate in rural Haiti, while there is a more equitable balance of priests and priestesses in urban areas.[220] The oungan and manbo are tasked with organising liturgies, preparing initiations, offering consultations with clients using divination, and preparing remedies for the sick.[221] There is no priestly hierarchy, with oungan and manbo being largely self-sufficient.[221] In many cases, the role is hereditary.[222] Historical evidence suggests that the role of the oungan and manbo intensified over the course of the 20th century.[223] As a result, "temple Vodou" is now more common in rural areas of Haiti than it was in historical periods.[224]

Vodou teaches that the lwa call an individual to become an oungan or manbo,[225] and if the latter refuses then misfortune may befall them.[226] A prospective oungan or manbo must normally rise through the other roles in a Vodou congregation before undergoing an apprenticeship with a pre-existing oungan or manbo lasting several months or years.[227] After this apprenticeship, they undergo an initiation ceremony, the details of which are kept secret from non-initiates.[228] Other oungan and manbo do not undergo any apprenticeship, but claim that they have gained their training directly from the lwa.[229] Their authenticity is often challenged, and they are referred to as hungan-macoutte, a term bearing some disparaging connotations.[227] Becoming an oungan or manbo is expensive, often requiring the purchase of ritual paraphernalia and land on which to build a temple.[230] To finance this, many save up for a long time.[230]

Vodouists believe that the oungan's role is modelled on the lwa Loco;[231] in Vodou mythology, he was the first oungan and his consort Ayizan the first manbo.[232] The oungan and manbo are expected to display the power of second sight,[233] something regarded as a gift from Bondye that can be revealed to the individual through visions or dreams.[234] Many priests and priestesses are often attributed fantastical powers in stories told about them,[235] and may bolster their status with claims to have received revelations from the lwa, sometimes via visits to the lwa's own abode.[236]

There is often bitter competition between different oungan and manbo.[237] Their main income derives from healing the sick, supplemented with payments received for overseeing initiations and selling talismans and amulets.[238] In many cases, oungan and manbo become wealthier than their clients.[239] Oungan and manbo are generally powerful and well-respected members of Haitian society.[240] Being an oungan or manbo provides an individual with both social status and material profit,[241] although the fame and reputation of individual priests and priestesses can vary widely.[242] Respected Vodou priests and priestesses are often literate in a society where semi-literacy and illiteracy are common.[243] They can recite from printed texts and write letters for illiterate members of their community.[243] Owing to their prominence in a community, the oungan and manbo can effectively become political leaders,[234] or otherwise exert an influence on local politics.[241]

The ounfò

A Vodou temple is called an ounfò,[244] varyingly spelled hounfò,[245] hounfort,[246] or humfo.[34] An alternative term is gangan, although the connotations of this term vary regionally in Haiti.[247] Most communal Vodou activities centre around this ounfò,[232] forming what is called "temple Vodou".[35] The size and shape of ounfòs vary, from basic shacks to more lavish structures, the latter being more common in Port-au-Prince.[232] Their designs are dependent on the resources and tastes of the oungan or manbo running them.[248] Each ounfò is autonomous,[249] and often has its own unique customs.[250]

A Vodou peristil in Croix des Mission, Haiti, photographed in 1980
The main ceremonial room in the ounfò is the peristil,[251] understood as a microcosmic representation of the cosmos.[252] In the peristil, brightly painted posts hold up the roof;[253] the central post is the poto mitan,[254] which is used as a pivot during ritual dances and the pillar through which the lwa enter the room during ceremonies.[253] It is around this central post that offerings, including both vèvè patterns and animal sacrifices, are made.[203] However, in the Haitian diaspora many Vodouists perform their rites in basements, where no poto mitan are available.[255] The peristil typically has an earthen floor, allowing libations to the lwa to drain directly into the soil;[256] where this is not possible, libations are poured into an enamel basin.[257] Some peristil include seating around the walls.[258]

Adjacent rooms in the ounfò include the caye-mystéres, also known as the bagi, badji, or sobadji.[259] This is where stonework altars, known as pè, stand against the wall or are arranged in tiers.[259] Also present may be a sink dedicated to the lwa Danbala-Wedo.[260] The caye-mystéres is also used to store clothing that will be worn by those possessed by the lwa during rituals.[261] If space is available, the ounfò may also have a room set aside for the patron lwa of that temple.[262] Many ounfòs have a room known as the djévo in which the initiate is confined during their initiatory ceremony.[261] Every ounfò usually has a room or corner of a room devoted to Erzuli Freda.[263] Some ounfò will also have additional rooms in which the oungan or manbo lives.[262]

The area around the ounfò often contains objects dedicated to particular lwa, such as a pool of water for Danbala, a black cross for Baron Samedi, and a pince (iron bar) embedded in a brazier for Criminel.[264] Sacred trees, known as arbres-reposoirs, sometimes mark the ounfò's external boundary.[265] Hanging from these trees can be found macounte straw sacks, strips of material, and animal skulls.[265] Various animals, particularly birds but also some mammal species such as goats, are sometimes kept within the perimeter of the ounfò for use as sacrifices.[265]

A Vodou ceremony taking place in an ounfò in Jacmel, Haiti
Forming a spiritual community of practitioners,[203] the ounfò's congregation are known as the pititt-caye (children of the house).[266] They worship under the authority of an oungan or manbo,[34] below whom is ranked the ounsi, individuals who make a lifetime commitment to serving the lwa.[267] Members of either sex can join the ounsi, although most are female.[268] The ounsi's duties include cleaning the peristil, sacrificing animals, and taking part in the dances at which they must be prepared to be possessed by a lwa.[269] The oungan and manbo conduct initiatory ceremonies whereby people become ounsi,[234] oversee their training,[232] and act as their counsellor, healer, and protector.[270] In turn, the ounsi are expected to be obedient to their oungan or manbo.[269]

One of the ounsi becomes the hungenikon or reine-chanterelle, the mistress of the choir. They are responsible for overseeing the liturgical singing and shaking the chacha rattle which dictates the rhythm during ceremonies.[271] They are aided by the hungenikon-la-place, commandant general de la place, or quartermaster, who is charged with overseeing offerings and keeping order during the rites.[232] Another figure is le confiance (the confidant), the ounsi who oversees the ounfò's administrative functions.[272] Congregants often form a sosyete soutyen (société soutien, support society), through which subscriptions are paid to help maintain the ounfò and organize the major religious feasts.[273] Another ritual figure sometimes present is the prèt savann ("bush priest"), a man with a knowledge of Latin who is capable of administering Catholic baptisms, weddings, and the last rites, and who is willing to perform these at Vodou ceremonies.[274]

In rural areas especially, a congregation may consist of an extended family.[221] Here, the priest will often be the patriarch of that family.[275] Families, particularly in rural areas, often believe that through their zansèt (ancestors) they are tied to a premye mèt bitasyon (original founder); their descent from this figure is seen as giving them their inheritance both of the land and of familial spirits.[32] In other examples, particularly in urban areas, an ounfò can act as an initiatory family.[276] A priest becomes the papa ("father") while the priestess becomes the manman ("mother") to the initiate;[277] the initiate becomes their initiator's pitit (spiritual child).[214] Those who share an initiator refer to themselves as "brother" and "sister".[227] Individuals may join a particular ounfò because it exists in their locality or because their family are already members. Alternatively, it may be that the ounfò places particular focus on a lwa whom they are devoted to, or that they are impressed by the oungan or manbo who runs the ounfò in question, perhaps having been treated by them.[269]

Initiation

Vodou is hierarchical and includes a series of initiations.[278] There are typically four levels of initiation,[279] the fourth of which makes someone an oungan or manbo.[280] There is much variation in what these initiation ceremonies entail,[114] and the details are kept secret.[281] Each initiatory stage is associated with a state of mind called a konesan (conaissance or knowledge).[282] Successive initiations are required to move through the various konesans,[234] and it is in these konesans that priestly power is believed to reside.[283]

The first initiation rite is the kanzo;[284] this term also describes the initiate themselves.[285] Initiation is generally expensive,[286] complex,[280] and requires significant preparation.[114] Prospective initiates are for instance required to memorise many songs and learn the characteristics of various lwa.[114] Vodouists believe the lwa may encourage an individual towards initiation, bringing misfortune upon them if they refuse.[287]

Initiation will often be preceded by bathing in special preparations.[288] The first part of the initiation rite is known as the kouche or huño, and is marked by salutations and offerings to the lwa.[289] It begins with the chire ayizan, a ceremony in which palm leaves are frayed and then worn by the initiate.[114] Sometimes the bat ge or batter guerre ("beating war") is performed instead, designed to beat away the old.[114] During the rite, the initiate comes to be regarded as the child of a particular lwa, their mèt tèt.[114]

This is followed by a period of seclusion within the djèvo known as the kouche.[114] A deliberately uncomfortable experience,[162] it involves the initiate sleeping on a mat on the floor, often with a stone for a pillow.[290] They wear a white tunic,[291] and a specific salt-free diet is followed.[292] It includes a lav tèt ("head washing") to prepare the initiate for having the lwa enter and reside in their head.[293] Voudoists believe that one of the two parts of the human soul, the gwo bonnanj, is removed from the initiate's head, thus making space for the lwa to enter and reside there.[162]

The initiation ceremony requires the preparation of pot tèts (head pots), usually white porcelain cups with a lid in which a range of items are placed, including hair, food, herbs, and oils. These are regarded as a home for the spirits.[294] After the period of seclusion in the djèvo, the new initiate is brought out and presented to the congregation; they are now referred to as ounsi lave tèt.[114] When the new initiate is presented to the rest of the community, they carry their pot tèt on their head, before placing it on the altar.[162] The final stage of the process involves the initiate being given an ason rattle.[295] The initiation process is seen to have ended when the new initiate is first possessed by a lwa.[162] Initiation is seen as creating a bond between a devotee and their tutelary lwa,[296] and the former will often take on a new name that alludes to the name of this lwa.[297] Finally, after the kouche, the new initiate may be expected to visit a Catholic church.[298]

Shrines and altars

The creation of sacred works is important in Vodou.[207] Votive objects used in Haiti are typically made from industrial materials, including iron, plastic, sequins, china, tinsel, and plaster.[30]

An altar, or pè, will often contain images (typically lithographs) of Roman Catholic saints.[299] Since developing in the mid-19th century, chromolithography has also had an impact on Vodou imagery, facilitating the widespread availability of images of the Roman Catholic saints who are equated with the lwa.[300] Various Vodouists have made use of varied available materials in constructing their shrines. Cosentino encountered a shrine in Port-au-Prince where Baron Samedi was represented by a plastic statue of Santa Claus wearing a black sombrero,[301] and in another by a statue of Star Wars-character Darth Vader.[302] In Port-au-Prince, it is common for Vodouists to include human skulls on their altar for the Gede.[218] In ounfòs where both Rada and Petwo deities are worshipped, their altars are kept separate.[303]

Various spaces other than the temple are used for Vodou ritual.[304] Cemeteries are seen as places where spirits reside, making them suitable for certain rituals,[304] especially to approach the spirits of the dead.[305] In rural Haiti, cemeteries are often family owned and play a key role in family rituals.[306] Crossroads are also ritual locations, selected as they are believed to be points of access to the spirit world.[304] Other spaces used for Vodou rituals include Christian churches, rivers, the sea, fields, and markets.[304]

An ason, the ritual rattle emblematic of the Vodou priesthood

Certain trees are regarded as having spirits resident in them and are used as natural altars.[243] Different species of tree are associated with different lwa; Oyu, for example, is linked with mango trees, and Danbala with bougainvillea.[86] Selected trees in Haiti have had metal items affixed to them, serving as shrines to Ogou, who is associated with both iron and the roads.[307] Spaces for ritual also appear in the homes of many Vodouists,[308] namely as a home altar called a wogatwa.[309] These may vary from complex altars to more simple variants including only images of saints alongside candles and a rosary.[35] Many practitioners will also have an altar devoted to their ancestors in their home, to which they direct offerings.[310]

Drawings known as vèvè are sketched onto the floor of the peristil using cornmeal, ash, coffee grounds, or powdered eggshells;[311] these are central to Vodou ritual.[252] Usually arranged symmetrically around the poto-mitan,[312] these designs sometimes incorporate letters;[243] their purpose is to summon lwa.[312] Inside the peristil, practitioners also unfurl ceremonial flags known as drapo (flags) at the start of a ceremony.[313] Often made of silk or velvet and decorated with shiny objects such as sequins,[314] the drapo often feature either the vèvè of specific lwa they are dedicated to or depictions of the associated Roman Catholic saint.[154] These drapo are understood as points of entry through which the lwa can enter the peristil.[315]

A batèms (baptism) is a ritual used to make an object a vessel for the lwa.[316] Objects consecrated for ritual use are believed to contain a spiritual essence or power called nanm.[317] The ason is a sacred rattle used in summoning the lwa,[318] especially for Rada rites.[319] It consists of an empty, dried gourd covered in beads and snake vertebra.[320] Prior to being used in ritual it requires consecration.[321] It is a symbol of the priesthood;[321] assuming the duties of a manbo or oungan is referred to as "taking the ason".[322] For Petwo rites a different rattle, the tcha-tcha, is favored.[319] Another type of sacred object are the "thunder stones", often prehistoric axe-heads, which are associated with specific lwa and kept in oil to preserve their power.[323]

Offerings and animal sacrifice

Feeding the lwa is of great importance,[324] with offering rites often termed manje lwa ("feeding the lwa").[325] Offering food and drink to the lwa is Vodou's most common ritual, conducted both communally and in the home.[324] The choice of food and drink offered varies depending on the lwa in question, with different lwa believed to favor certain foodstuffs and beverages.[326] Danbala for instance requires white foods, especially eggs,[327] while Legba's offerings, whether meat, tubers, or vegetables, need to be grilled on a fire.[324] The lwa of the Ogu and Nago nations prefer raw rum or clairin,[324] while the lwa Ayizan avoids alcohol.[328] Certain foods are also offered in the belief that they are intrinsically virtuous, such as grilled maize, peanuts, and cassava.[178]

A manje sèk (dry meal) is an offering of grains, fruit, and vegetables that often precedes a simple ceremony; it takes its name from the absence of blood.[329] Animal sacrifices are often favored at annual feasts that an oungan or manbo organizes for their congregation.[178] Species used for sacrifice include chickens, goats, and bulls, with pigs often favored for Petwo lwa.[330] The animal may be washed, dressed in the color of the specific lwa, and marked with food or water.[331] Often, the animal's throat will be cut and the blood collected in a calabash.[332] Chickens are often killed by the pulling off of their heads; their limbs may be broken beforehand.[333] In the case of Agwé, a lwa of the sea, a white sheep may be sailed out to Trois Ilets and thrown overboard as a sacrifice.[334]

Once killed, the animal may be butchered and organs removed, sometimes cooked, and placed on the altar or vèvè.[335] Here, it sometimes sites within a kwi, a calabash shell bowl.[336] Vodouists believe that the lwa consume the essence of the food.[178] Food is typically offered when it is cool, and is left for a while before humans may eat it.[336] Offerings not consumed by the celebrants are often buried or left at a crossroads.[337] Libations might be poured into the ground.[178]

The Dans

Multiple styles of drum are employed in Vodou ritual; this example is used in rites invoking Rada lwa Vodou's nocturnal gatherings are often referred to as the dans ("dance"), reflecting the prominent role that dancing has in such ceremonies.[255] Their purpose is to invite a lwa to enter the ritual space and possess one of the worshippers, through whom they can communicate with the congregation.[338] The success of this procedure is predicated on mastering the different ritual actions and on getting the aesthetic right to please the lwa.[338] The proceedings can last for the entirety of the night.[255]

On arriving, the congregation typically disperse along the perimeter of the peristil.[255] The ritual often begins with Roman Catholic prayers and hymns;[339] these may be led by the prèt savann, although not all ounfò have anyone in this role.[340] This is followed by the shaking of the ason rattle to summon the lwa.[341] Two Haitian Creole songs, the Priyè Deyò ("Outside Prayers"), may then be sung, lasting from 45 minutes to an hour.[342] The main lwa are then saluted, individually, in a specific order.[342] Legba always comes first, as he is believed to open the way for the others.[342] Each lwa may be offered either three or seven songs, which are specific to them.[343]

The rites employed to call down the lwa vary depending on the nanchon in question.[344] During large-scale ceremonies, the lwa are invited to appear through the drawing of vèvè on the ground using cornmeal.[224] Also used to call down the spirits is a process of drumming, singing, prayers, and dances.[224] Libations and offerings of food are made to the lwa, which includes animal sacrifices.[224] The order and protocol for welcoming the lwa is referred to as regleman.[345]

A symbol of the religion,[346] the drum is perhaps the most sacred item in Vodou.[347] Vodouists believe that ritual drums contain an etheric force, the nanm,[348] and a spirit called ountò.[349] Specific ceremonies accompany the construction of a drum so that it is considered suitable for ritual use.[350] In the bay manje tanbou ("feeding of the drum") ritual, offerings are given to the drum itself.[348] Reflecting its status, when Vodouists enter the peristil they customarily bow before the drums.[351] Different types of drum are used, sometimes reserved for rituals devoted to specific lwa; Petwo rites for instance involve two types of drum, whereas Rada rituals require three.[352] Ritual drummers are called tanbouryes,[353] and becoming one requires a lengthy apprenticeship.[354] The drumming style, choice of rhythm, and composition of the orchestra differs depending on which nation of lwa are being invoked.[355] The drum rhythms typically generate a kase ("break"), which the master drummer will initiate to oppose the main rhythm being played by the rest of the drummers. This is seen as having a destabilizing effect on the dancers and helping to facilitate their possession.[356]

Drumming is typically accompanied by singing,[351] usually in Haitian Creole,[357] although sometimes in Fon or Yoruba.[358] These songs are often structured around a call and response, with a soloist singing a line and the chorus responding with either the same line or an abbreviated version.[359] The soloist is the oundjenikon, who maintains the rhythm with a rattle.[360] Lyrically simple and repetitive, these songs are invocations to summon a lwa.[351] Dancing also plays a major role in ritual,[361] utilising the rhythm of the drummers.[359] The dances are simple, lacking complex choreography, and usually involve the dancers moving counterclockwise around the poto mitan.[362] Specific dance movements can indicate the lwa or their nanchon being summoned;[363]

dances for Agwe for instance imitate swimming motions.[364] Vodouists believe that the lwa renew themselves through the vitality of the dancers.[365]

Spirit possession

Spirit possession is important,[366] being central to many Vodou rituals.[88] The person being possessed is called the chwal (horse);[367] the act of possession is termed "mounting a horse".[368] Vodou teaches that both male and female lwa can possess either men or women.[369] Although children are often present at these ceremonies, [370] they are rarely possessed as it is considered too dangerous.[371] Some individuals attending the dance will put a certain item, often wax, in their hair or headgear to prevent possession.[372] While the specific drums and songs used are designed to encourage a specific lwa to possess someone, sometimes an unexpected lwa appears and takes possession instead.[373]

The possession trance is termed the kriz lwa.[354] Vodouists believe that the lwa enters the head of the chwal and displaces their gwo bon anj,[374] making the chwal tremble and convulse.[375] As their consciousness has been removed from their head during the possession, Vodouists believe that the chwal will have no memory of the incident. [376] The length of the possession varies, often lasting a few hours but sometimes several days.[377] Sometimes a succession of lwa possess the same individual, one after the other.[378] Possession may end with the chwal collapsing in a semi-conscious state,[379] being left physically exhausted.[365]

Once the lwa possesses an individual, the congregation greet it with a burst of song and dance.[365] The chwal will typically bow before the officiating priest or priestess and prostrate before the poto mitan.[380] The chwal is often escorted into an adjacent room where they are dressed in clothing associated with the possessing lwa. Alternatively, the clothes are brought out and they are dressed in the peristil itself.[381] These costumes and props help the chwal take on the appearance of the lwa;[359] many ounfò have a large wooden phallus used by those possessed by Gede lwa, for instance.[382] Once the chwal has been dressed, congregants kiss the floor before them.[369]

The chwal adopts the behavior of the possessing lwa;[383] their performance can be very theatrical.[373] Those believing themselves possessed by the serpent Danbala, for instance, often slither on the floor, dart out their tongue, and climb the posts of the peristil.[129] Those possessed by Zaka, lwa of agriculture, will dress as a peasant in a straw hat with a clay pipe and will often speak in a rustic accent.[384] The chwal will often join in with the dances,[365] eat or drink.[359] Sometimes the lwa, through the chwal, will engage in financial transactions with members of the congregation, for instance by selling them food that has been given as an offering or lending them money. [385]

Possession facilitates direct communication between Vodouists and the lwa;[365] through the chwal, the lwa communicates with their devotees, offering counsel, chastisement, blessings, warnings about the future, and healing.[386] Lwa possession has a healing function, with the possessed individual expected to reveal possible cures to the ailments of those assembled.[365] Clothing that the chwal touches is regarded as bringing luck.[387] The lwa may also offer advice to the individual they are possessing; because the latter is not believed to retain any memory of the events, it is expected that other members of the congregation will pass along the lwa's message.[387] In some instances, practitioners have reported being possessed at other times of ordinary life, such as when someone is in the middle of the market,[388] or when they are asleep.[389]

Divination

A common form of divination employed by oungan and manbo is to invoke a lwa into a pitcher, where it will then be asked questions.[390] Other forms of divination used by Vodouists include the casting of shells,[390] cartomancy,[391] studying leaves, coffee grounds or cinders in a glass, or looking into a candle flame.[392] A form of divination associated especially with Petwo lwa is the use of a gembo shell, sometimes with a mirror attached to one side and affixed at both ends to string. The string is twirled and the directions of the shell used to interpret the responses of the lwa.[390]

Healing

Healing plays an important role in Vodou.[393] A client will approach a manbo or oungan complaining of illness or misfortune and the latter will use divination to determine the cause and select a remedy.[394] Manbo and oungan typically have a wide knowledge of plants and their medicinal uses.[191] When collecting plants they are expected to show them respect, for instance by leaving coins in payment for removing leaves.[395]

To heal, Vodou specialists often prescribe baths, consisting of water infused with various ingredients,[396] or produce powders for a specific purpose, such as to attract good luck or aid seduction.[397] Alternatively, they may create a material object infused with spirits or medicines, a wanga,[398] although these can also be devoted to harmful purposes.[399] Manbo and oungan often provide talismans,[400] called a pwen (point),[401] travay maji (magic work),[402] pakèt or pakèt kongo.[403] The latter term highlights the potential influence of the Bakongo minkisi on these Haitian ritual creations.[404]

In Haiti, oungan or manbo may advise their clients to seek assistance from medical professionals, while the latter may also send their patients to see an oungan or manbo.[239] Although in the late 20th century there were concerns that the Haitian reliance on oungan and manbo was contributing to the spread of HIV/AIDS,[405] by the early 21st century, various NGOs and other groups were working on bringing Vodou officiants into the broader campaign against the virus.[406] In Haiti, there are also doktè fèy ("herb doctors"; "leaf doctors") who offer herbal remedies for ailments but deal in fewer problems than oungan and manbo.[407]

Harming practices

Vodou teaches that supernatural factors cause or exacerbate many problems.[408] It holds that humans can cause supernatural harm to others, either unintentionally or deliberately,[409] in the latter case exerting power over a person through possession of hair or nail clippings belonging to them.[410] Vodouists also often believe that supernatural harm can be caused by other entities. The lougawou is a human, usually female, who transforms into an animal and drains blood from sleeping victims,[411] while members of the Bizango secret society are feared for their reputed ability to transform into dogs, in which form they walk the streets at night.[412]

An individual who turns to the lwa to harm others is a choché,[187] or a bòkò,[413] although this latter term can also refer to an oungan generally.[187] They are described as someone who sert des deux mains ("serves with both hands"),[414] or is travaillant des deux mains ("working with both hands").[225] As the good lwa have rejected them as unworthy, bòko are believed to work with lwa achte ("bought lwa"),[415] spirits that will work for anyone who pays them,[416] and often members of the Petwo nanchon.[417] According to Haitian popular belief, bòkò engage in anvwamò ("expeditions"), setting the dead against an individual to cause the latter's sudden illness and death,[418] and utilise baka, malevolent spirits sometimes in animal form.[419] In Haiti, there is much suspicion and censure toward those suspected of being bòkò.[225] The curses of the bòkò are believed to be countered by the oungan and manbo, who can revert the curse through an exorcism that incorporates invocations of protective lwa, massages, and baths.[420] In Haiti, some oungan and manbo have been accused of working with a bòkò, arranging for the latter to curse individuals so that they can financially profit from removing these curses.[225]

Funerals, the dead, and zonbis

Vodou features complex funerary customs.[422] Following an individual's death, the desounen ritual frees the gwo bonnanj from their body and disconnects them from their tutelary lwa.[423] The corpse is then bathed in a herbal infusion by an individual termed the benyè, who gives the dead person messages to take with them.[424] A wake, the veye, follows.[425] The body is then buried in the cemetery,[426] often according to Roman Catholic custom.[427]

In northern Haiti, an additional rite takes place at the ounfò on the day of the funeral, the kase kanari (breaking of the clay pot). In this, a jar is washed in substances including kleren, placed within a trench dug into the peristil floor, and smashed. The trench is then refilled.[428] The night after the funeral, the novena takes place at the home of the deceased, involving Roman Catholic prayers;[429] a mass for them is held a year after death,[430] sometimes performed by a prèt savann.[431] Vodouists fear the dead's ability to harm the living;[432] it is believed that the deceased may for instance punish their living relatives if the latter fail to appropriately mourn them.[433]

Many Vodouists believe that a practitioner's spirit dwells in the land of Ginen, located at the bottom of a lake or river, for a year and a day.[434] A year and a day after death, the wete mò nan dlo ("extracting the dead from the waters of the abyss") ritual may take place, in which the deceased's gwo bonnanj is reclaimed from the realm of the dead and placed into a clay jar or bottle called the govi. Now ensconced in the world of the living, the gwo bonnanj of this ancestor is deemed capable of assisting its descendants and guiding them with its wisdom.[435] Practitioners sometimes believe that failing to conduct this ritual can result in misfortune, illness, and death for the family of the deceased.[436] Offerings then given to this spirit of the dead are termed manje mò.[437] The notion of a spirit being encased in a vessel and then used for workings likely derives from Bakongo influences,[438] and has similarities with the Bakongo-derived Palo religion from Cuba.[439]

Another belief about the dead, that of zonbis, is one of the most sensationalized aspects of Haitian religion.[441] Zonbi are often regarded as the gwo bonnanj of the recently deceased that have been captured and forced to work for their master.[442] The gwo bonnanj may then be kept inside a bottle or other vessel.[443] The practice is often linked to Chanpwèl (secret societies), which are suspected of murdering the individual they wish to turn into a zonbi.[444] To achieve this, they may obtain the bones of a deceased person, especially their skull, sometimes by bribing cemetery workers;[445] the skull will often be baptised, given food, and set a particular task to specialise in, such as healing a specific malady.[47] Those intending to take a gwo bonnanj as a zonbi may have to borrow or buy them from Baron Samedi.[446]

An alternative idea in Haitian lore is that it is the body that is turned into a zonbi,[447] in which case a bòkò has seized an individual's ti bonnanj and left the body as an empty vessel that can be manipulated.[448] The reality of this phenomenon is contested,[446] although the anthropologist Wade Davis argued that this was based on a real practice whereby Bizango societies used poisons to make certain individuals more pliant.[449] Haitians generally do not fear zonbis, but rather fear becoming one themselves.[448] The figure of the zonbi has also been interpreted as a metaphor for the enslavement central to Haitian history.[450]

Festival

On the saints' days of the Roman Catholic calendar, Vodouists often hold "birthday parties" for the Iwa associated with the saint whose day it is.[451] These are marked with special altars for the celebrated Iwa,[452] as well as the preparation of their preferred food.[453] Devotions to the Gede are particularly common around the days of the dead, All Saints (1 November) and All Souls (2 November),[454] with celebrations largely taking place in the cemeteries of Port-au-Prince.[455] At this festival, those devoted to the Gede dress in black and purple, with funeral frock coats, black veils, and top hats, all linking to the Gede's associations with death.[456]

The build-up to Easter sees Rara bands, largely consisting of peasants and the urban poor, process through the streets singing and dancing.[457] Each Rara band is considered to be under the patronage of a particular Iwa, holding a contract with them that typically lasts seven years.[458] Performing Rara is regarded as a service to the Iwa,[459] and some Rara leaders claim that a Iwa instructed them to form their band.[460] An oungan will typically be part of the Rara band and will oversee their religious obligations, for instance performing rituals during their procession,[461] or providing members with a benyen protective bath before they perform.[462] They may also attempt to curse or poison rival Rara bands.[463]

Pilgrimage

The Saut d'Eau, a popular pilgrimage site for Vodouists

Pilgrimage is part of Haitian religious culture.[464] In July, Vodouist pilgrims visit Plaine du Nord near Bwa Caiman, where according to legend the Haitian Revolution began. There, sacrifices are made and pilgrims immerse themselves in the twou (mud pits).[465] The pilgrims often mass before the Church of Saint Jacques, with Saint Jacques perceived as being the Iwa Ogou.[466] Another popular pilgrimage site, again typically visited in July, is Saut d'Eau ("waterfall") or Sodo, located outside the village of Ville-Bonheur where the Virgin Mary (Èzili) allegedly appeared in the 1840s. At the site, pilgrims bathe under waterfalls associated with water-spirits like Danbala.[467]

Haitian pilgrims commonly wear coloured ropes around their head or waist;[464] a tradition that may derive from a Bakongo custom, kanga ("to tie"), during which sacred objects were bound with rope.[468] Haitians abroad have also established pilgrimage sites, with thousands of Haitians visiting the Church of Our Lady of Mount Carmel in East Harlem, New York City for the feast day of the Virgin, whom the Vodouists in attendance interpret as Èzili Dantò.[469]

History

Before the Revolution

Area of West African Vodun practice, the religion with the greatest influence on Haitian Vodou

In 1492, Christopher Columbus' expedition established a Spanish colony on Hispaniola.[470] A growing European presence decimated the island's Indigenous Taíno population, both through introduced diseases and exploitation as laborers.[471] The European colonists then turned to imported West African slaves as a new source of labor; Africans first arrived on Hispaniola circa 1512.[472] Most of the enslaved were prisoners of war.[473] Some were probably priests of traditional religions, helping to transport their rites to the Americas.[473] Others were probably Muslim, although Islam exerted little influence on Vodou,[474] while some probably practiced traditional religions that had already absorbed Roman Catholic iconographic influences.[475]

By the late 16th century, French colonists were settling in western Hispaniola; Spain recognized French sovereignty over that part of the island, which became Saint-Domingue, in a series of treaties signed in 1697.[476] Moving away from its previous subsistence economy, in the 18th century Saint-Domingue refocused its economy around the mass export of indigo, coffee, sugar, and cocoa to Europe.[477] To work the plantations, the French colonists placed a renewed emphasis on importing enslaved Africans; whereas there were twice as many Africans as Europeans in the colony in 1681, by 1790 there were eleven times as many Africans as Europeans.[478] Ultimately, Saint-Domingue became the colony with the largest number of slaves in the Caribbean.[479]

Roman Catholicism was the official religion of Saint-Domingue.[480] The Code Noir issued by King Louis XIV in 1685 forbade the open practice of African religions on the colony.[481] This Code compelled slave-owners to have their slaves baptised and instructed as Roman Catholics;[482] the fact that the process of enslavement led to these Africans becoming Christian was a key way in which the slave-owners sought to morally legitimate their actions.[483] However, many slave-owners took little interest in having their slaves instructed in Roman Catholic teaching;[483] they often did not want their slaves to spend time celebrating saints' days rather than laboring and were also concerned that black congregations could provide scope to foment revolt.[484]

Enslavement destroyed the social fabric of African traditional religions, which were typically rooted in ethnic and family membership.[485] Although certain cultural assumptions about the nature of the universe would have been widely shared among the enslaved Africans, they came from diverse linguistic and ethno-cultural backgrounds and had to forge common cultural practices on Hispaniola.[486] According to Desmangles, over the course of the 18th century Vodou gradually emerged as "a composite of various African ethnic traditions", merging diverse practices into a more cohesive form.[487]

African religions had to be practiced secretly, with Roman Catholic iconography and rituals probably used to conceal the true identity of the deities venerated.[488] This resulted in a system of correspondences between African spirits and Roman Catholic saints.[488] Afro-Haitians adopted other aspects of French colonial culture;[489] Vodou drew influence from European grimoires,[490] commedia performances,[491] and Freemasonry, with Masonic lodges having been established across Saint-Domingue in the 18th century.[492] Vodou rituals took place in secret, usually at night; one such rite was described during the 1790s by a white man, Médéric Louis Élie Moreau de Saint-Méry.[493] Some enslaved Afro-Haitians escaped to form Maroon groups, which often practiced Vodou.[494]

The Haitian Revolution and the 19th century

The Affaire de Bizoton of 1864. The murder and alleged cannibalization of a child by eight Vodou devotees caused a scandal worldwide and was taken as proof of the evil nature of Vodou.
In Haitian lore, Vodou is often presented as having played a vital role in the Haitian Revolution,[21] although scholars debate the extent to which this is true.[495] According to legend, a Vodou ritual took place in Bois-Caïman on 14 August 1791 at which the participants swore to overthrow the slave owners before massacring local whites and sparking the Revolution.[496] Although a popular tale in Haitian folklore, it has no historical evidence to support it.[497] Moreover, two of the revolution's early leaders, Boukman and Francois Mackandal, were reputed to be powerful oungans.[498] Amid growing rebellion, the French Emperor Napoleon Bonaparte ordered troops into the colony in 1801,[499] but in 1803 the French conceded defeat and the rebel leader Jean-Jacques Dessalines proclaimed Saint-Domingue to be a new republic named Haiti.[500]

The Revolution broke up the large land-ownings and created a society of small subsistence farmers.[501] Haitians largely began living in lakous, or extended family compounds, which enabled the preservation of African-derived Creole religions.[502] These lakous often had their own lwa rasin (root lwa),[503] being intertwined with concepts of land and kinship.[504] Many Roman Catholic missionaries had been killed in the Revolution,[505] and after its victory Dessalines declared himself head of the Church in Haiti.[505] Protesting these actions, the Roman Catholic Church cut ties with Haiti in 1805;[506] this allowed Vodou to predominate in the country.[507] Many churches left abandoned were adopted for Vodou rites, continuing the syncretization between the two systems.[508] At this point, with no new arrivals from Africa, Vodou began to stabilise,[509] transforming from "a widely-scattered series of local cults" into "a religion".[510] The Roman Catholic Church re-established its formal presence in Haiti in 1860.[507]

Haiti's first three presidents sought to suppress Vodou, using police to break-up rituals which they feared as a source of rebellion.[511] In 1847, Faustin Soulouque became president; he was sympathetic to Vodou and allowed it to be practiced more openly.[512] In the Bizoton Affair of 1863, several Vodou practitioners were accused of ritually killing a child before eating it. Historical sources suggest that they may have been tortured prior to confessing to the crime, at which they were executed.[513] The affair received much attention.[513]

20th century to the present

The United States occupied Haiti between 1915 and 1934,[515] although it faced armed resistance from Haitian peasants, many of them Vodouists.[516] American occupation encouraged international interest in Vodou,[517] something catered for in the sensationalist writings of Faustin Wirkus, William Seabrook, and John Craige,[518] as well as in Vodou-themed shows for tourists.[519] The period also saw the growing influence of the Roman Catholic Church,[520] and in 1941 the Church backed Operation Nettoyage (Operation Cleanup), a government campaign to expunge Vodou, during which many ounfòs were destroyed.[521] Violent responses from Vodouists led President Élie Lescot to abandon the Operation.[522]

During the occupation, the indigénisme (indigenist) movement developed among Haiti's middle classes, later transmogrifying into the international Négritude movement. These encouraged a more positive assessment of Vodou and peasant culture, a trend supported by the appearance of professional ethnological research on the topic from the 1930s onward.[523] Church influence in Haiti was curtailed by François Duvalier, the country's president from 1957 to 1971.[524] Although he restored Catholicism as the state religion, Duvalier was widely perceived as a champion of Vodou,[525] calling it "the supreme factor of Haitian unity".[514] He utilized it for his own purposes, encouraging rumors about his own supernatural powers,[526] and selecting oungans as his chefs-de-sections (rural section chiefs).[527]

After Duvalier's son and successor, Jean-Claude, was overthrown in 1986, there were attacks on Vodouists perceived to have supported the Duvaliers, partly motivated by Protestant anti-Vodou campaigns; practitioners called this violence the Dechoukaj ('uprooting').[528] Two groups, the Zantray and Bode Nasyonal, were formed to defend the rights of Vodouists and hold rallies.[529] Haiti's 1987 constitution enshrined freedom of religion,[530] after which President Jean-Bertrand Aristide granted Vodou official recognition in 2003,[531] thus allowing Vodouists to officiate at civil ceremonies such as weddings and funerals.[532]

The latter half of the 20th century saw the substantial growth of evangelical Protestantism in Haiti, generating tensions with Vodouists.[533] These Protestants regard Vodou as Satanic,[534] and unlike the Roman Catholic authorities have generally refused to compromise with its practitioners.[535] The 2010 Haiti earthquake fuelled conversion from Vodou to Protestantism,[536] with many Protestants claiming that the earthquake was punishment for the sins of the Haitian population, including their practice of Vodou.[537] Mob attacks on Vodouists followed in the wake of the earthquake,[538] and again following the 2010 cholera outbreak.[539]

The first three decades of the 20th century saw growing Haitian migration to eastern Cuba, introducing Vodou to the island.[540] From 1957, many Haitians emigrated to escape Duvalier, taking Vodou with them.[541] In the U.S., Vodou has attracted non-

Haitians, especially African Americans and Caribbean migrants,[417] and has syncretized with other religions like Santería and Spiritism.[417] During the latter half of the 20th century, those seeking to revive New Orleans Voodoo initiated practices that brought the religion closer to Haitian Vodou or Santería than it had been early in that century.[542]

Demographics

Many Vodouists interpret Haiti's flag through their own theology; in this view, the blue is for Ezili Dantò, and the red for Ogou Feray.[543]
Vodou is the majority religion of Haiti,[544] for most Haitians practice both Vodou and Roman Catholicism.[48] An often used joke about Haiti holds that the island's population is 85% Roman Catholic, 15% Protestant, and 100% Vodou.[545] Even some of those who reject Vodou acknowledge its close associations with Haitian identity.[21]

It is difficult to determine how many Haitians practice Vodou, largely because the country has never had an accurate census and many Vodouists will not openly admit they practice the religion.[546] Among the country's middle and upper-classes, for instance, many individuals publicly decry Vodou yet privately practice it.[547] Estimates have nevertheless been made; one suggested that 80% of Haitians practice Vodou,[548] while in 1992, Desmangles put the number of Haitian practitioners at six million.[549] Several scholars have suggested that Haitian religion could be seen as a continuum with Vodou on one end and Roman Catholicism at the other, but with most Haitians operating between the two, going through Roman Catholic rites of passage but turning to Vodou ritual specialists in times of crisis.[550]

Vodouists learn about the religion by taking part in its rituals,[551] with children learning by observing adults.[280] Vodou does not focus on proselytizing;[552] according to Brown, it has "no pretensions to the universal".[544] It has nevertheless spread beyond Haiti; amid the Revolution, many Haitians fled to Louisiana, where their Vodou contributed to the development of Louisiana Voodoo.[553] Since then, Vodou has also spread to other Caribbean countries like the Dominican Republic, Cuba, and Puerto Rico,[554] as well as to Western countries such as France,[554] Canada,[209] and the United States.[554] Major ounfòs exist in U.S. cities such as Miami, New York City, Washington, DC, Boston, and Oakland, California.[555]

Reception and legacy

Various scholars describe Vodou as one of the world's most maligned and misunderstood religions.[556] Throughout Haitian history, Christians have often presented Vodou as Satanic,[557] while in broader Anglophone and Francophone society it has been widely associated with sorcery, witchcraft, and black magic.[558] In U.S. popular culture, for instance, Haitian Vodou is usually portrayed as destructive and malevolent.[559] Non-practitioners have often depicted Vodou in literature, theater, and film;[560] in many cases, such as the films White Zombie (1932) and London Voodoo (2004), these promote sensationalist views of the religion.[561] The lack of any central

Vodou authority has hindered efforts to combat these negative representations.[562]

Humanity's relationship with the lwa has been a recurring theme in Haitian art,[338] and the Vodou pantheon was a major topic for the mid-20th century artists of the "Haitian Renaissance".[563] In the late 1950s, art collectors began to take an interest in Vodou ritual paraphernalia and by the 1970s an established market for this material had emerged.[564] Exhibits of Vodou ritual material have been displayed abroad; the Fowler Museum's exhibit on "Sacred Arts of Haitian Vodou" for instance traveled the U.S. for three years in the 1990s.[565] Vodou has appeared in Haitian literature,[566] and has also influenced Haitian music, as with the rasin band Boukman Eksperyans,[567] while theatre troupes have performed simulated Vodou rituals for audiences outside Haiti.[568] Documentaries focusing on Vodou have appeared[569]—such as Maya Deren's 1985 film Divine Horsemen[570] or Anne Lescot and Laurence Magloire's 2002 work Of Men and Gods[571]—which have in turn encouraged some viewers to take a practical interest in the religion.[572]

AI Overview
Ars notoria, sive Flores aurei - Grimoire Magic
The Ars Notoria (Notory Art) is a medieval grimoire, or magical text, claiming to grant users enhanced memory, eloquence, and rapid acquisition of all knowledge (the liberal arts) through prayers, orations, and sacred figures (notae) revealed to King Solomon by angels. Unlike typical grimoires focused on spirit control, it's a "student's grimoire," emphasizing intellectual and spiritual enlightenment via angelic communication, using complex symbols and divine names in various languages.
Key Aspects:
Origin & Attribution: A 13th-century Latin text, attributed to King Solomon, based on older sources, claiming angelic instruction.
Purpose: To enhance mental faculties, memory, understanding, and the ability to master sciences and arts quickly.
Method: Utilizes prayers and invocations to angels, focusing on divine revelation rather than conjuration.
Content: Includes intricate prayers, divine names (Hebrew, Greek, Latin), and complex diagrams called notae (pictorial figures) crucial for operation, notes Yale University, this YouTube video, this YouTube video, this Amazon page, this Barnes & Noble page, Wikipedia, this Facebook post.
Distinction: Stands apart from other Solomonic literature as an "angel magic" text focused purely on intellectual and spiritual knowledge acquisition, lacking typical ritualistic tools like circles or conjurations, notes this YouTube video.
Inclusion: Often found within collections like The Lesser Key of Solomon, though sometimes omitted.

In essence, the Ars Notoria is a unique medieval text for gaining divine wisdom and academic prowess through angelic prayer and symbolic visualization, making it a significant artifact in the history of Western esotericism and magic.

Celtic Sacred Trees: The Role of Trees in Druidic Rituals ...
Druidic lore and Celtic magic center on deep nature connection, seasonal cycles (Samhain, Beltane), and reverence for sacred groves, oaks, and trees, using divination (bird flight, entrails) and healing arts (herbs, incantations) for community guidance, prophecy, and influence over fortune, fertility, and weather, rooted in oral traditions and symbols like the Ogham tree alphabet, all emphasizing harmony, transformation (fire, water), and the interplay of the physical and spiritual worlds.
Core Concepts & Beliefs
Nature & Spirits: Belief in spirits within nature, trees (especially oaks), and elements (earth, air, fire, water).
Awen: A concept of divine inspiration or spiritual energy.
Cycles: Deep focus on the wheel of the year, marking seasons and cosmic rhythms.
Interconnectedness: Life, death, and rebirth seen as an eternal exchange, maintaining cosmic balance.
Druidic Roles & Practices
Social Class: Priests, philosophers, advisors to kings, judges, healers, and keepers of knowledge.
Oral Tradition: Knowledge passed down orally, requiring years of memorization.
Divination: Reading omens in birds, entrails, and natural phenomena.
Rituals: Held in sacred groves, involving seasonal festivals (Samhain, Beltane, Lughnasa).
Sacred Plants: Mistletoe (harvested with a golden sickle) and rowan trees (protection) held special significance.
Sacrifice: Animal and sometimes human sacrifices offered to gods, often to rivers or lakes.
Ogham: The alphabet of trees used for divination and insight.
Celtic Magic (Lore)
Healing: Spells for wounds, fertility, removing barrenness, and protection.
Transformation: Shapeshifting, invisibility spells, elemental control, and curses (like the "rime" curse).
Fortune: Spells for success in battle, good weather, and prosperity.
Power: Druids could halt battles and compel compromise.
Historical Context & Decline

Sources: Primarily from Greek and Roman accounts, often sensationalized.
Decline: Roman conquest and later Christianization led to persecution and the loss of oral tradition.
Modern Druidry
A revival (from the 18th century) seeking to reconnect with nature, wisdom, and community, adapting ancient principles for contemporary life.

Who were the Druids?
Druid lore centers on ancient Celtic priest-philosophers deeply connected to nature, acting as judges, teachers, and spiritual leaders who preserved sacred oral traditions about theology, astronomy, and healing, with key symbols including the oak tree and mistletoe, and sacred sites in forests. While Roman accounts provide much detail (often biased), Druid practices emphasized harmony with nature, reincarnation, and the interconnectedness of all life, with their knowledge passed down orally for up to 20 years, and their traditions were suppressed by the Romans but saw modern revivals.
Core Beliefs & Practices
Nature Worship: A profound reverence for nature, seeing spirits in trees (especially oaks) and elements, viewing the natural world as divine.
Oral Tradition: Knowledge (philosophy, law, medicine, divination) was memorized in verse, taking decades to learn, and never written down to keep it secret.
Sacred Sites: Rituals occurred in sacred groves (forests) and circles, marking seasonal festivals like Samhain and Beltane.
Roles: Druids were judges, advisors, poets (bards), and seers (ovates), holding high status and exemption from taxes.
Afterlife: Believed in the soul's immortality and reincarnation, viewing the cycle of life, death, and rebirth as central.
Key Symbols & Rituals
Oak & Mistletoe: The oak symbolized strength and wisdom; mistletoe, gathered with a golden sickle, represented life and fertility.
Elements: Honored earth, air, fire, and water for balance and harmony.
Augum Alphabet: An Ogham-like script associated with trees, each letter having unique symbolism.
History & Decline
Roman Conflict: Romans suppressed Druids, viewing their power as a threat, leading to persecution and decline.
Loss of Knowledge: The oral tradition's loss after Roman conquest and Christianization meant much knowledge was lost.
Modern Revival
Neo-Druidism: A 18th-century revival began, blending nature worship, environmentalism, and spirituality, distinct from but inspired by ancient lore, with modern groups forming today.

Celtic magic involves ancient practices from Celtic cultures, focusing on nature, deities (like Merlin, Ceridwen), and the land, using tools like the Ogham alphabet and poetic verse for divination, healing, and transformation, encompassing both benevolent and darker aspects, with practices centered on connection to spirits, ancestors, and the Otherworld, distinct from but influential on modern paganism. Key elements include Druidic wisdom, plant lore, storytelling, and the potent use of words and music.

Core Concepts & Elements

Nature & Land: A deep reverence for the land, trees (especially oak and mistletoe), rivers, and natural cycles forms the foundation.
Spirits & Deities: Working with gods, goddesses (like Ceridwen), heroes (like Cuchulain), fairies, and land spirits is central.
The Otherworld: Belief in a parallel spiritual realm, a source of wisdom and magic.
The Spoken Word: Poetry, hymns, and chants (like cantalon) were considered magical tools for accomplishing effects.
Ogham: An ancient alphabet of notches, used for communication, divination, and working with tree lore.
Transformation: Figures like Math and Gwydion could transform people into animals, a key magical act.
Examples of Magic in Mythology & Practice
Merlin (Miran): Gained prophetic gifts after madness in the forest, a figure blending Druidism and magic.
Ceridwen's Cauldron: A sentient cauldron bestowing wisdom, central to Welsh myth.
Druidic Rituals: Involving oak groves, mistletoe, and potentially complex chants.
Divination: Using Ogham, casting lots (sticks, stones), and interpreting natural signs.
Curses & Blessings: Ancient inscriptions (like the Larzac tablet) show curses, while St. Patrick's loricae (protective prayers) show blessings.
Modern Practice
Revival: A modern resurgence involves learning from ancient sources, focusing on personal connection, and using traditional Celtic elements in ritual.
Practical Applications: Includes spellwork, meditation, working with Celtic deities, creating offerings, and herbal magic, with books serving as guides.

A druid was a member of the high-ranking priestly class in ancient Celtic cultures. The druids were religious leaders as well as legal authorities, adjudicators, lorekeepers, medical professionals and political advisors. Druids left no written accounts. While they were reported to have been literate, they are believed to have been prevented by doctrine from recording their knowledge in written form. Their beliefs and practices are attested in some detail by their contemporaries from other cultures, such as the Romans and the Greeks.

The earliest known references to the druids date to the 4th century BCE. The oldest detailed description comes from Julius Caesar's Commentarii de Bello Gallico (50s BCE). They were described by other Roman writers such as Cicero,[2] Tacitus,[3] and Pliny the Elder.[4] Following the Roman invasion of Gaul, the druid orders were suppressed by the Roman government under the 1st-century CE emperors Tiberius and Claudius, and had disappeared from the written record by the 2nd century.

In about 750 CE, the word druid appears in a poem by Blathmac, who wrote about Jesus, saying that he was "better than a prophet, more knowledgeable than every druid, a king who was a bishop and a complete sage."[5] The druids often appear in both the tales from Irish mythology first written down by monks and nuns of the Celtic Church like the "Táin Bó Cúailnge" (12th century), but also in later Christian legends where they are largely portrayed as sorcerers who opposed the introduction of Christianity by missionaries.[6] In the wake of the Celtic revival during the 18th and 19th centuries, fraternal and neopagan groups were founded based on ideas about the ancient druids, a movement known as Neo-Druidism. Many popular notions about druids, based on misconceptions of 18th-century scholars, have been largely superseded by more recent study.[7]

Etymology

The English word druid derives from the Latin word druidēs (plural), which was considered by ancient Roman writers to come from the native Gaulish word for these figures.[8][9][10] Other Roman texts employ the form druidae, while the same term was used by Greek ethnographers as δρυΐδης (druidēs).[11][12] Although no extant Romano-Celtic inscription is known to contain the form,[8] the word is cognate with the later insular Celtic words: Old Irish druí 'druid, sorcerer'; Old Cornish druw; and Middle Welsh dryw 'seer; wren'.[10] Based on all available forms, the hypothetical proto-Celtic word may be reconstructed as *dru-wid-s (pl. *druwides), whose original meaning is traditionally taken to be "oak-knower", based upon the association of druids' beliefs with oak trees, which was made by Pliny the Elder, who also suggested that the word is borrowed from the Greek word δρῦς (drȳs) 'oak tree'[13][10][14][15][16] but nowadays it is more often understood as originally meaning 'one with firm knowledge' (i.e. 'a great sage'),[17][18] as Pliny is the only ancient author drawing the association between oaks and druids[19] and the intensifying modifier sense of the first element fits better with other similar compounds attested in Old Irish (suí 'sage, wise man' < *su-wid-s 'good knower', duí 'idiot, fool' < *du-wid-s 'bad knower', ainb 'ignorant' < *an-wid-s 'not-knower'). The two elements go back to the Proto-Indo-European roots *deru-[20] and *weid- "to see".[21] Both Old Irish druí and Middle Welsh dryw could refer to the wren,[10] possibly connected with an association of that bird with augury in Irish and Welsh tradition (see also Wren Day).[10][22]

Practices and doctrines

Sources by ancient and medieval writers provide an idea of the religious duties and social roles involved in being a druid.

Societal role and training

Imaginative illustration of 'An Arch Druid in His Judicial Habit', from The Costume of the Original Inhabitants of the British Islands by S.R. Meyrick and C.H. Smith (1815), the gold gorget collar copying Irish Bronze Age examples.[23]
The Greco-Roman and the vernacular Irish sources agree that the druids played an important part in pagan Celtic society. In his description, Julius Caesar wrote that they were one of the two most important social groups in the region (alongside the equites, or nobles) and were responsible for organizing worship and sacrifices, divination, and judicial procedure in Gallic, British, and Irish societies.[24][failed verification] He wrote that they were exempt from military service and from paying taxes, and had the power to excommunicate people from religious festivals, making them social outcasts.[24] Two other classical writers, Diodorus Siculus and Strabo, wrote about the role of druids in Gallic society, stating that the druids were held in such respect that if they intervened between two armies they could stop the battle.[25]

Diodorus writes of the Druids that they were "philosophers" and "men learned in religious affairs" who are honored.[26] Strabo mentions that their domain was both natural philosophy and moral philosophy,[27] while Ammianus Marcellinus lists them as investigators of "obscure and profound subjects".[28]

Pomponius Mela was the first author to say that the druids' instruction was secret and took place in caves and forests.[29] Cicero said that he knew a Gaulish druid who "claimed to have that knowledge of nature which the Greeks call physiologia, and he used to make predictions, sometimes by means of augury and sometimes by means of conjecture".[30]

Druidic lore consisted of a large number of memorized verses, and Caesar remarked that it could take up to twenty years to complete the course of study. What was taught to druid novices anywhere is conjecture: of the druids' oral literature, not one certifiably ancient verse is known to have survived, even in translation. All instruction was communicated orally, but for ordinary purposes, Caesar reports,[31] the Gauls had a written language in which they used Greek letters. In this he probably draws on earlier writers; by the time of Caesar, Gaulish inscriptions had moved from Greek script to Latin script.

Caesar believed that this practice of oral transmission of knowledge and opposition to recording their ideas had dual motivations: wanting to keep druidic knowledge from becoming common, and improving the druids' faculties of memory.[32] Caesar writes that of the Druids "a large number of the young men resort for the purpose of instruction".[33] Due to the privileges afforded to the druids he tells us that "many embrace this profession of their own accord", whereas many others are sent to become druids by their families.[34]

Sacrifice

Further information: Celts and human sacrifice, Threefold death, and Ritual of oak and mistletoe

An 18th century illustration of a wicker man, the form of execution that Caesar wrote the druids used for human sacrifice. From the "Duncan Caesar", Tonson, Draper, and Dodsley edition of the Commentaries of Caesar translated by William Duncan and published in London in 1753.
Greek and Roman writers frequently made reference to the druids as practitioners of human sacrifice.[35] Caesar says those who had been found guilty of theft or other criminal offences were considered preferable for use as sacrificial victims, but when criminals were in short supply, innocents would be acceptable. A form of sacrifice recorded by Caesar was the burning alive of victims in a large wooden effigy, now often known as a wicker man. A differing account came from the 10th-century Commenta Bernensia, which stated that sacrifices to the deities Teutates, Esus, and Taranis were by drowning, hanging, and burning, respectively (see threefold death).

Diodorus Siculus asserts that a sacrifice acceptable to the Celtic gods had to be attended by a druid, for they were the intermediaries between the people and the divinities. He remarked upon the importance of prophets in druidic ritual:

These men predict the future by observing the flight and calls of birds and by the sacrifice of holy animals: all orders of society are in their power ... and in very important matters they prepare a human victim, plunging a dagger into his chest; by observing the way his limbs convulse as he falls and the gushing of his blood, they are able to read the future.

Archaeological evidence from western Europe has been widely used to support the theory that Iron Age Celts practiced human sacrifice. Mass graves that were found in a ritual context, which date from this period, have been unearthed in Gaul, at both Gournay-sur-Aronde and Ribemont-sur-Ancre in the region of the Belgae chiefdom. Jean-Louis Brunaux, the excavator of these sites, interpreted them as areas of human sacrifice in devotion to a war god,[36][37] although this conclusion was criticized by archaeologist Martin Brown, who believed that the corpses might be those of honoured warriors who were buried in the sanctuary, rather than sacrifices.[38] Some historians have questioned whether the Greco-Roman writers were accurate in their claims. J. Rives remarked that it was "ambiguous" whether druids ever performed such sacrifices, for the Romans and Greeks were known to project what they saw as barbarian traits onto foreign peoples including not only druids but Jews and Christians as well, thereby confirming their own "cultural superiority" in their own minds.[39]

Nora Chadwick, an expert in medieval Welsh and Irish literature who believed the druids to be great philosophers, has also supported the idea that they had not been involved in human sacrifice, and that such accusations were imperialist Roman propaganda.[40]

Philosophy
Alexander Cornelius Polyhistor referred to the druids as philosophers, and called their doctrine of the immortality of the soul and metempsychosis (reincarnation), "Pythagorean":

The Pythagorean doctrine prevails among the Gauls' teaching that the souls of men are immortal, and that after a fixed number of years they will enter into another body

Caesar made similar observations:

With regard to their actual course of studies, the main object of all education is, in their opinion, to imbue their scholars with a firm belief in the indestructibility of the human soul, which, according to their belief, merely passes at death from one tenement to another; for by such doctrine alone, they say, which robs death of all its terrors, can the highest form of human courage be developed. Subsidiary to the teachings of this main principle, they hold various lectures and discussions on the stars and their movement, on the extent and geographical distribution of the earth, on the different branches of natural philosophy, and on many problems connected with religion.

—Julius Caesar, De Bello Gallico, VI, 14
Diodorus Siculus, writing in 36 BCE, described how the druids followed "the Pythagorean doctrine", that human souls "are immortal, and after a prescribed number of years they commence a new life in a new body".[41] In 1928, the folklorist Donald A. Mackenzie speculated that Buddhist missionaries had been sent by the Indian king Ashoka.[42] Caesar noted the druidic doctrine that the original ancestor of the tribe was the god that he referred to as "Dispater", which means "Father Dis".

Diogenes Laertius, in the 3rd century CE, wrote that "Druids make their pronouncements by means of riddles and dark sayings, teaching that the gods must be worshipped, and no evil done, and manly behavior maintained".[43]

Druids in mythology

Druids play a prominent role in Irish folklore, generally serving lords and kings as high ranking priest-counselors with the gift of prophecy and other assorted mystical abilities – the best example of these possibly being Cathbad. The chief druid in the court of King Conchobar mac Nessa of Ulster, Cathbad features in several tales, most of which detail his ability to foretell the future. In the tale of Deirdre of the Sorrows – the foremost tragic heroine of the Ulster Cycle – the druid prophesied before the court of Conchobar that Deirdre would grow up to be very beautiful, and that kings and lords would go to war over her, much blood would be shed because of her, and Ulster's three greatest warriors would be forced into exile for her sake. This prophecy, ignored by the king, came true.[44]

The greatest of these mythological druids was Amergin Glúingel,[45] a bard and judge for the Milesians featured in the Mythological Cycle. The Milesians were seeking to overrun the Tuatha Dé Danann and win the land of Ireland but, as they approached, the druids of the Tuatha Dé Danann raised a magical storm to bar their ships from making landfall. Thus Amergin called upon the spirit of Ireland itself, chanting a powerful incantation that has come to be known as The Song of Amergin[46] and, eventually (after successfully making landfall), aiding and dividing the land between his royal brothers in the conquest of Ireland,[47][48][49] earning the title Chief Ollam of Ireland.

Other such mythological druids were Tadg mac Nuadat of the Fenian Cycle, and Mug Ruith, a powerful blind druid of Munster.

Irish mythology

Irish mythology has a number of female druids, often sharing similar prominent cultural and religious roles with their male counterparts. The Irish have several words for female druids, such as bandruí ("woman-druid"), found in tales such as Táin Bó Cúailnge;[50] Bodhmall, featured in the Fenian Cycle, and one of Fionn mac Cumhaill's childhood caretakers;[51] and Tlachtga,[52] daughter of the druid Mug Ruith who, according to Irish tradition, is associated with the Hill of Ward, site of prominent festivals held in Tlachtga's honour during the Middle Ages.[53]

Biróg, another bandruí of the Tuatha Dé Danann, plays a key role in an Irish folktale where the Fomorian warrior Balor attempts to thwart a prophecy foretelling that he would be killed by his own grandson by imprisoning his only daughter Eithne in the tower of Tory Island, away from any contact with men.[54][55] Bé Chuille (daughter of the woodland goddess Flidais, and sometimes described as a sorceress rather than a bandruí) features in a tale from the Metrical Dindshenchas, where she joins three other of the Tuatha Dé to defeat the evil Greek witch Carman.[53][56] Other bandrúi include Relbeo– a Nemedian druid who appears in The Book of Invasions, where she is described as the daughter of the king of Greece, and the mother of Fergus Lethderg[53] and Alma One-Tooth.[57] Dornoll was a bandrúi in Scotland, who normally trained heroes in warfare, particularly Laegaire and Conall; she was the daughter of Domnall Mildemail.[53]

The Gallizenae

Location of Île de Sein in the Atlantic Ocean

According to classical authors, the Gallizenae (or Gallisenae) were virgin priestesses of the Île de Sein off Pointe du Raz, Finistère, western Brittany.[58] Their existence was first mentioned by the Greek geographer Artemidorus Ephesius and later by the Greek historian Strabo, who wrote that their island was forbidden to men, but the women came to the mainland to meet their husbands. Which deities they honored is unknown.[59] According to Pomponius Mela, the Gallizenae acted as both councilors and practitioners of the healing arts:

Sena, in the Britannic Sea, opposite the coast of the Osismi, is famous for its oracle of a

Gaulish god, whose priestesses, living in the holiness of perpetual virginity, are said to be nine in number. They call them Gallizenae, and they believe them to be endowed with extraordinary gifts to rouse the sea and the wind by their incantations, to turn themselves into whatsoever animal form they may choose, to cure diseases which among others are incurable, to know what is to come and to foretell it. They are, however, devoted to the service of voyagers only who have set out on no other errand than to consult them.[60][61][62]

Druidesses in Gaul

According to the Historia Augusta, Alexander Severus received a prophecy about his death from a Gallic druidess (druiada).[63] The work also has Aurelian questioning druidesses about the fate of his descendants, to which they answered in favor of Claudius II.[64] Flavius Vopiscus is also quoted as recalling a prophecy received by Diocletian from a druidess of the Tungri.[65]

Sources on druid beliefs and practices

Greek and Roman records

Édouard Zier, "Druids Inciting the Britons to Oppose the Landing of the Romans"—from Cassell's History of England, Volume I

The earliest surviving literary evidence of druids emerges from the classical world of Greece and Rome. Archaeologist Stuart Piggott compared the attitude of the Classical authors toward the druids as being similar to the relationship that had existed in the 15th and 18th centuries between Europeans and the societies that they were just encountering in other parts of the world, such as the Americas and the South Sea Islands. He highlighted the attitude of "primitivism" among both Early Modern Europeans and Classical authors, owing to their perception that these newly encountered societies had less technological development and were less advanced in socio-political development.[66]

Historian Nora Chadwick, in a categorization subsequently adopted by Piggott, divided the Classical accounts of the druids into two groups, distinguished by their approach to the subject and their chronological contexts. She calls the first of these groups the "Posidonian" tradition, after one of its primary exponents, Posidonius, and notes that it takes a largely critical attitude towards the Iron Age societies of Western Europe, emphasizing their "barbaric" qualities. The second of these two groups is termed the "Alexandrian" group, being centred on the scholastic traditions of Alexandria, Egypt; she notes that it took a more sympathetic and idealized attitude toward these foreign peoples.[67] Piggott drew parallels between this categorisation and the ideas of "hard primitivism" and "soft primitivism" identified by historians of ideas Arthur Oncken Lovejoy and Franz Boas.[68]

One school of thought holds that all these accounts are inherently unreliable and may be entirely fictional. They have suggested that the druid might have been a fiction created by Classical writers to reinforce the image of the barbaric "other" beyond the civilized Greco-Roman world, thereby legitimizing the Roman Empire's expansion into these areas.[69]

The earliest record of the druids comes from two Greek texts of c. 300 BCE: a history of philosophy written by Sotion of Alexandria, and a study of magic widely attributed to Aristotle. Both texts are now lost, but are quoted in the 2nd-century CE work Vitae by Diogenes Laërtius.[70]

Some say that the study of philosophy originated with the barbarians. In that among the Persians there existed the Magi, and among the Babylonians or Assyrians the Chaldaei, among the Indians the Gymnosophistae, and among the Celts and Gauls men who were called druids and semnothei, as Aristotle relates in his book on magic, and Sotion in the twenty-third book of his Succession of Philosophers.

—Vitae, Introduction, Section 1[71]
Subsequent Greek and Roman texts from the 3rd century BCE refer to "barbarian philosophers",[72] possibly in reference to the Gaulish druids.

Julius Caesar

Julius Caesar, the Roman general and later dictator, who wrote the most important source for the Druids in Britain
The earliest extant text that describes druids in detail is Julius Caesar's Commentarii de Bello Gallico, book VI, written in the 50s or 40s BCE. A general intent on conquering Gaul and Britain, Caesar described the druids as concerned with "divine worship, the due performance of sacrifices, private or public, and the interpretation of ritual questions". He said they played an important part in Gaulish society, being one of the two respected classes, along with the equites (in Rome, the name for members of a privileged class above the common people, but also "horsemen"), and that they served as judges.

Caesar wrote that the druids recognized the authority of a single leader who would rule until his death, after which a successor would be chosen by vote or by conflict. He remarked that to settle disputes between tribes, they met annually at a sacred place at the borders of the Carnutes' territory, which is said to be the centre of Gaul. They viewed Britain as the centre of druidic study, and that they were not found among the German tribes to the east of the Rhine. According to Caesar, many young men were trained to be druids, during which time they had to learn all the associated lore by heart. He also said that their main teaching was "the souls do not perish, but after death pass from one to another". They were concerned with "the stars and their movements, the size of the cosmos and the earth, the world of nature, and the power and might of the immortal gods", indicating they were involved with not only such common aspects of religion as theology and cosmology, but also astronomy. Caesar held that they were "administrators" during rituals of human sacrifice, for which criminals were usually used, and that the method was by burning in a wicker man.[24]

Although he had firsthand experience of the Gaulish people and, by extension, likely of druids, modern historians have widely criticized Caesar's account as inaccurate. One issue raised by such historians as Fustel de Coulanges[73] was that while Caesar described the druids as a significant power within Gaulish society, he did not mention them even once in his accounts of his Gaulish conquests. Nor did Aulus Hirtius, who continued Caesar's account of the Gallic Wars after Caesar's death. Hutton believed that Caesar had manipulated the idea of the druids so they would appear both civilized (being learned and pious) and barbaric (performing human sacrifice) to Roman readers, thereby representing both "a society worth including in the Roman Empire" and one that required civilizing with Roman rule and values, thus justifying his wars of conquest.[74] Sean Dunham suggested that Caesar had simply taken the Roman religious functions of senators and applied them to the druids.[75][76] Daphne Nash believed it "not unlikely" that he "greatly exaggerates" both the centralized system of druidic leadership and its connection to Britain.[77]

Other historians have accepted that Caesar's account might be more accurate. Norman J. DeWitt surmised that Caesar's description of the role of druids in Gaulish society may report an idealized tradition, based on the society of the 2nd century BCE, before the pan-Gallic confederation led by the Arverni was smashed in 121 BCE, followed by the invasions of Teutones and Cimbri, rather than on the demoralized and disunited Gaul of his own time.[78] John Creighton speculated that in Britain, the druidic social influence was already in decline by the mid-1st century BCE, in conflict with emergent new power structures embodied in paramount chieftains.[79] Other scholars see the Roman conquest itself as the main reason for the decline of the druid orders.[80] Archaeologist Miranda Aldhouse-Green (2010) asserted that Caesar offered both "our richest textual source" regarding the druids, and "one of the most reliable". She defended the accuracy of his accounts by highlighting that while he may have embellished some of his accounts to justify Roman imperial conquest, it was "inherently unlikely" that he constructed a fictional class system for Gaul and Britain, particularly considering that he was accompanied by a number of other Roman senators who would have also been sending reports on the conquest to Rome, and who would have challenged his inclusion of serious falsifications.[69]

Cicero, Diodorus Siculus, Strabo, and Tacitus

Roman soldiers killing druids and burning their groves on Anglesey, as described by Tacitus

Other classical writers also commented on the druids and their practices. Caesar's contemporary, Cicero, noted that he had met a Gallic druid, Divitiacus, of the Aedui tribe. Divitiacus was supposedly well-versed in the natural world and practiced augury.[2] Whether Diviaticus was genuinely a druid can, however, be disputed, for Caesar also knew this figure, and wrote about him, calling him by the more Gaulish-sounding (and thereby presumably the more authentic) Diviciacus, but never referred to him as a druid and indeed presented him as a political and military leader.[81]

Another classical writer to take up describing the druids not too long afterward was Diodorus Siculus, who published this description in his Bibliotheca Historica in 36 BCE. Alongside the druids, or as he called them, drouidas, who he believed to be philosophers and theologians, he remarked how there were poets and singers in Celtic society, who he called bardous, or bards.[41] Such an idea was expanded upon by Strabo, who, writing in the 20s CE, declared that amongst the Gauls, there were three types of honoured figures:[82]

the poets and singers known as bardoi, the diviners and specialists in the natural world known as o'vateis, and those who studied "moral philosophy", the druidai.
The Roman writer Tacitus, who was himself a senator and historian, described how when the Roman army, led by Suetonius Paulinus, attacked the island of Mona (Anglesey; Welsh: Ynys Môn), the legionaries were awestruck on landing, by the appearance of a band of druids, who, with hands uplifted to the sky, poured forth terrible imprecations on the heads of the invaders. He says these "terrified our soldiers who had never seen such a thing before". The courage of the Romans, however, soon overcame such fears, according to the Roman historian; the Britons were put to flight, and the sacred groves of Mona were cut down.[83] Tacitus is also the only primary source that gives accounts of druids in Britain, but portrays them negatively, as ignorant savages.[84]

Irish and Welsh records

In the Middle Ages, after Ireland and Wales were Christianized, druids appear in a number of written sources, mainly tales and stories such as Táin Bó Cúailnge, and in the hagiographies of various saints. These were all written by Christian monks.

Irish literature and law codes

In Irish-language literature, druids (draoithe, plural of draoi) are sorcerers with supernatural powers, who are respected in society, particularly for their ability to do divination. Dictionary of the Irish Language defines a druí (which has numerous variant forms, including draoi) as a magician, wizard, or diviner.[85] In the literature, the druids cast spells and turn people into animals or stones, or curse peoples' crops to be blighted.[86]

When druids are portrayed in early Irish sagas and in saints' lives that are set in pre-Christian Ireland, they are usually given high social status. The evidence of the law-texts, which were first written down in the 600s and 700s CE, suggests that with the coming of Christianity, the role of the druid in Irish society was rapidly reduced to that of a sorcerer who could be consulted to cast spells or do healing magic, and that his standing declined accordingly.[87] According to the early legal tract Bretha Crólige, the sick-maintenance due to a druid, satirist, and brigand (díberg) is no more than that which is due to a bóaire (an ordinary freeman). Another law-text, Uraicecht Becc ('small primer'), gives the druid a place among the dóer-nemed, or professional classes, which depend upon a patron for their status, along with wrights, blacksmiths, and entertainers, as opposed to the fili, who alone enjoyed free nemed-status.[88]

Welsh literature

While druids featured prominently in many medieval Irish sources, they were far rarer in their Welsh counterparts. Unlike the Irish texts, the Welsh term commonly used to refer to the druids, dryw, was used solely to refer to prophets, not to sorcerers or pagan priests. Historian Ronald Hutton noted that there were two explanations for the use of the term in Wales: the first was that it was a survival from the pre-Christian era, when dryw had been ancient priests; the second was that the Welsh had borrowed the term from the Irish, as had the English (who used the terms dry and drycraeft to refer to magicians and magic respectively, most probably influenced by the Irish terms).[89]

Archaeology

A pair of 1st century BCE(?) "spoons" from England. It is speculated that they were used for divination. Eleven of such pairs have been found.[90] Miranda Green believes that a liquid was put into the spoon with the hole, and allowed to drip into the other spoon below, and then the drip-pattern was interpreted.[91]

As the historian Jane Webster stated, "individual druids ... are unlikely to be identified archaeologically".[92] A. P. Fitzpatrick, in examining what he believed to be astral symbolism on late Iron Age swords, has expressed difficulties in relating any material culture, even the Coligny calendar, with druidic culture.[93]

Nonetheless, some archaeologists have attempted to link certain discoveries with written accounts of the druids. The archaeologist Anne Ross linked what she believed to be evidence of human sacrifice in Celtic pagan society (such as the Lindow Man bog body) to the Greco-Roman accounts of human sacrifice being officiated-over by the druids.[94][95] Miranda Aldhouse-Green– a professor of archaeology at Cardiff University, has noted that Suetonius's army would have passed very near the site while travelling to deal with Boudicca, and postulates that the sacrifice may have been connected.[96] A 1996 discovery of a skeleton that was buried with advanced medical and possibly divinatory equipment has, however, been nicknamed the "Druid of Colchester".

Headdress of the "Deal Warrior", possibly worn by druids, 200–150 BCE, British Museum[97]

An excavated burial in Deal, Kent discovered the "Deal Warrior"– a man who was buried at around 200–150 BCE with a sword and shield, and wearing an almost unique head-band, which is too thin to be part of a leather helmet. The crown is bronze with a broad band around the head, and a thin strip that crosses the top of the head horizontally. Since traces of hair were left on the metal, it must have been worn without any padding beneath it. The form of the headdress resembles depictions of Romano-British priests from several centuries later, leading to speculation among archaeologists that the man might have been a religious official– a druid.[98]

History of reception

Prohibition and decline under Roman rule

In the Gallic Wars of 58–51 BCE, the Roman army, led by Julius Caesar, conquered the many tribal chiefdoms of Gaul, and annexed it as a part of the Roman Republic. According to accounts produced in the following centuries, the new rulers of Roman Gaul subsequently introduced measures to wipe out the druids from that country. According to Pliny the Elder, writing in the 70s CE, it was the emperor Tiberius (ruled 14–37 CE) who introduced laws which banned not only druidic practices, but also other native soothsayers and healers– a move which Pliny applauded, believing that it would end human sacrifice in Gaul.[99] A somewhat different account of Roman legal attacks upon the druids was made by Suetonius, writing in the 2nd century CE, when he stated that Rome's first emperor, Augustus (ruled 27 BCE–14 CE), had decreed that no-one could be both a druid and a Roman citizen, and that this was followed by a law passed by the later emperor Claudius (ruled 41–54 CE) which "thoroughly suppressed" the druids by banning their religious practices.[100]

Possible late survival of Insular druid orders

Further information: Christianization of Ireland, Christianization of Wales, and Taliesin

The best evidence of a druidic tradition in the British Isles is the independent cognate of the Celtic *druwid- in Insular Celtic: The Old Irish druídecht survives in the meaning of 'magic', and the Welsh dryw in the meaning of 'seer'.

While the druids as a priestly caste were extinct with the Christianization of Wales, complete by the 7th century at the latest, the offices of bard and of "seer" (Welsh: dryw) persisted in medieval Wales into the 13th century.

Minister Macauley (1764) reported the existence of five druidic altars, including a large circle of stones fixed perpendicularly in the ground near the Stallir House on Boreray near the westernmost settlement of the UK St, Kilda.[101]

Classics professor Phillip Freeman discusses a later reference to 'dryades', which he translates as 'druidesses', writing, "The fourth century CE collection of imperial biographies known as the Historia Augusta contains three short passages involving Gaulish women called 'dryades' ('druidesses'). He points out that "In all of these, the women may not be direct heirs of the druids who were supposedly extinguished by the Romans – but in any case they do show that the druidic function of prophecy continued among the natives in Roman Gaul."[102] Additionally, female druids are mentioned in later Irish mythology, including the legend of Fionn mac Cumhaill, who, according to the 12th century The Boyhood Deeds of Fionn, is raised by the woman druid Bodhmall and her companion, another wise-woman.[52][51]

Christian historiography and hagiography

The story of Vortigern, as reported by Nennius, gives one of the very few glimpses of possible druidic survival in Britain after the Roman arrival. He wrote that after being excommunicated by Germanus of Auxerre, the British leader Vortigern invited twelve druids to help him.

In the lives of saints and martyrs, the druids are represented as magicians and diviners. In Adamnan's vita of Columba, two of them act as tutors to the daughters of Lóegaire mac Néill, the High King of Ireland, at the coming of Saint Patrick. They are represented as endeavouring to prevent the progress of Patrick and Saint Columba by raising clouds and mist. Before the battle of Culdremne (561 CE), a druid made an airbe drtiad ("fence of protection"?) around one of the armies, but what is precisely meant by that phrase is unclear. The Irish druids seem to have had a peculiar tonsure. The word druí is always used to render the Latin word magus, and in one passage, St Columba speaks of Jesus as his druid. Similarly, a life of Saint Beuno states that when he died, he had a vision of "all the saints and druids."[103]

Sulpicius Severus' vita of Martin of Tours relates how Martin encountered a peasant funeral, carrying the body in a winding sheet, which Martin mistook for some druidic rites of sacrifice, "because it was the custom of the Gallic rustics in their wretched folly to carry about through the fields the images of demons veiled with a white covering". So Martin halted the procession by raising his pectoral cross: "Upon this, the miserable creatures might have been seen at first to become stiff like rocks. Next, as they endeavoured, with every possible effort, to move forward, but were not able to take a step farther, they began to whirl themselves about in the most ridiculous fashion, until, not able any longer to sustain the weight, they set down the dead body." Then discovering his error, Martin raised his hand again to let them proceed: "Thus", the hagiographer points out, "he both compelled them to stand when he pleased, and permitted them to depart when he thought good."[104]

Later revivals

Main articles: Celtic revival and Neo-Druidism

From the 18th century, England and Wales saw a revival of interest in the druids. John Aubrey (1626–1697) had been the first modern writer to (incorrectly) connect Stonehenge and other megalithic monuments with the druids. Since Aubrey's theory was confined to his notebooks, the first wide audience for this idea were readers of William Stukeley (1687–1765).[105] It is incorrectly believed that John Toland (1670–1722) founded the Ancient Druid Order; however, the research of historian Ronald Hutton has revealed that the ADO was founded by George Watson MacGregor Reid in 1909.[106] The order never used (and still does not use) the title "Archdruid" for any member, but falsely credited William Blake as having been its "Chosen Chief" from 1799–1827, without corroboration in Blake's numerous writings or among modern Blake scholars. Blake's bardic mysticism derives instead from the pseudo-Ossianic epics of Macpherson; his friend Frederick Tatham's depiction of Blake's imagination, "clothing itself in the dark stole of moral sanctity"— in the precincts of Westminster Abbey— "it dwelt amid the druid terrors", is generic rather than specifically neo-druidic.[107] John Toland was fascinated by Aubrey's Stonehenge theories, and wrote his own book about the monument without crediting Aubrey. The roles of bards in 10th century Wales had been established by Hywel Dda and it was during the 18th century that the idea arose that druids had been their predecessors.[108]

The 19th century idea, gained from uncritical reading of the Gallic Wars, that under cultural-military pressure from Rome the druids formed the core of 1st century BCE resistance among the Gauls, was examined and dismissed before World War II,[109] though it remains current in folk history.

Druids began to figure widely in popular culture with the first advent of Romanticism. Chateaubriand's novel Les Martyrs (1809) narrated the doomed love of a druid priestess and a Roman soldier; though Chateaubriand's theme was the triumph of Christianity over pagan druids, the setting was to continue to bear fruit. Opera provides a barometer of well-informed popular European culture in the early 19th century: In 1817 Giovanni Pacini brought druids to the stage in Trieste with an opera to a libretto by Felice Romani about a druid priestess, La Sacerdotessa d'Irminsul ("The Priestess of Irminsul"). Vincenzo Bellini's druidic opera, Norma was a fiasco at La Scala, when it premiered the day after Christmas, 1831; but in 1833 it was a hit in London. For its libretto, Felice Romani reused some of the pseudo-druidical background of La Sacerdotessa to provide colour to a standard theatrical conflict of love and duty. The story was similar to that of Medea, as it had recently been recast for a popular Parisian play by Alexandre Soumet: the chaste goddess (casta diva) addressed in Norma's hit aria is the moon goddess, worshipped in the "grove of the Irmin statue".

A central figure in 19th century Romanticist, Neo-druid revival, is Welshman Edward Williams, better known as Iolo Morganwg. His writings, published posthumously as The Iolo Manuscripts (1849) and Barddas (1862), are not considered credible by contemporary scholars. Williams said that he had collected ancient knowledge in a "Gorsedd of Bards of the Isles of Britain" he had organized. While bits and pieces of the Barddas still turn up in some "Neo-Druidic" works, the documents are not considered relevant to ancient practice by most scholars.

Another Welshman, William Price (4 March 1800 – 23 January 1893), a physician known for his support of Welsh nationalism, Chartism, and his involvement with the Neo-Druidic religious movement, has been recognized as a significant figure of 19th century Wales. He was arrested for cremating his deceased son, a practice he believed to be a druid ritual, but won his case; this in turn led to the Cremation Act 1902.[110][111][112]

In 1927 T. D. Kendrick sought to dispel the pseudo-historical aura that had accrued to druids,[113] asserting, "a prodigious amount of rubbish has been written about Druidism";[114] Neo-druidism has nevertheless continued to shape public perceptions of the historical druids.

Some strands of contemporary Neo-Druidism are a continuation of the 18th century revival and thus are built largely around writings produced in the 18th century and after by second-hand sources and theorists. Some are monotheistic. Others, such as the largest druid group in the world, the Order of Bards, Ovates and Druids, draw on a wide range of sources for their teachings. Members of such Neo-Druid groups may be Neopagan, occultist, Christian or non-specifically spiritual.

Modern scholarship

Druidic ceremony for the Autumn Equinox on top of Primrose Hill in London
In the 20th century, as new forms of textual criticism and archaeological methods were developed, allowing for greater accuracy in understanding the past, various historians and archaeologists published books on the subject of the druids, and came to their own conclusions. Archaeologist Stuart Piggott, the author of The Druids (1968), accepted the Greco-Roman accounts, and considered the druids to be a barbaric and savage priesthood who performed human sacrifices.[115] This conclusion was largely supported by another archaeologist, Anne Ross, the author of Pagan Celtic Britain (1967) and The Life and Death of a Druid Prince (1989), though she believed that they were essentially tribal priests, having more in common with the shamans of tribal societies than with the classical philosophers.[116] Ross' conclusion was largely accepted by two other prominent archaeologists to write on the subject: Miranda Aldhouse-Green,[117] the author of The Gods of the Celts (1986), Exploring the World of the Druids (1997), and Caesar's Druids: Story of an Ancient Priesthood (2010); and Barry Cunliffe, the author of Iron Age Communities in Britain (1991) and The Ancient Celts (1997).[118]

Mystery School Teachings (Eleusinian, Orphic, Mithraic)

AI Overview

Mystery School Teachings (Eleusinian, Orphic, Mithraic) offered secret, transformative initiations in the Greco-Roman world, promising spiritual enlightenment and a better afterlife through dramatic rituals, symbolic knowledge, and moral purification, centered on deities like Demeter & Persephone (Eleusinian), the mythic Orpheus (Orphic), and the god Mithras (Mithraic). Key themes included death/rebirth cycles, union with the divine, secret knowledge (esoteric), asceticism, and initiation grades, appealing to those seeking personal salvation beyond state religions, notes Fiveable and worldhistory.org.

Eleusinian Mysteries (Greece)

Focus: Goddesses Demeter & Kore (Persephone), tied to grain, fertility, and the underworld myth.

Teachings: Hope for a blessed afterlife, symbolic rebirth, and relief from fear of death.

Rituals: Two stages (Lesser & Greater Mysteries) with dramatic reenactments of Persephone's journey.

Orphic Mysteries (Greece)

Focus: Orpheus, the mythical musician who journeyed to the underworld.

Teachings: Soul purification (metempsychosis/reincarnation), asceticism (abstinence from meat/wine), liberation of the divine soul from the body.

Practices: Secret writings (rhapsodies), purification, and a focus on the afterlife.
Mithraic Mysteries (Roman Empire)
Focus: The god Mithras, popular among Roman soldiers.
Teachings: Astronomical knowledge, cosmic union, and spiritual progress.
Rituals: Seven grades of initiation with trials, performed in underground temples (Mithraea).
Common Characteristics of Mystery Schools
Secrecy: Rituals and specific teachings were kept hidden from non-initiates (mystai).
Initiation: Gradual progression through symbolic stages or grades.
Promise: A transformative experience, personal salvation, and a favorable afterlife.
Inclusivity: Often open to women, foreigners, and slaves, unlike state cults.

Eleusinian, Orphic, Mithraic)

AI Overview
Eleusinian, Orphic, and Mithraic refer to prominent ancient Greco-Roman mystery cults, secret religious societies offering personal salvation and afterlife promises through initiation, contrasting with public polytheism by providing deeper spiritual experiences, often focusing on themes of death, rebirth, and divine union, using symbolic rituals and esoteric knowledge, with the Eleusinian Mysteries centered on Demeter/Persephone, Orphism on Dionysus/ Orpheus, and Mithraism on the Persian god Mithras.
Eleusinian Mysteries
Focus: Demeter (goddess of agriculture) & Persephone (her daughter, abducted by Hades).
Key Theme: The cycle of death and rebirth, symbolized by Persephone's descent and return from the underworld, promising initiates a blessed afterlife.
Rituals: Annual 10-day festival with processions, purification, sacrifices, and consumption of a sacred drink (kykeon), possibly containing hallucinogens, leading to profound, secret revelations.
Accessibility: Open to all, regardless of status, but required initiation.
Orphic Mysteries
Focus: Dionysus (Zagreus) and the mythical poet Orpheus.
Key Theme: Humanity's dual nature (divine soul trapped in a Titanic body); salvation through purification to escape reincarnation.
Practices: Asceticism, vegetarianism, strict moral code, and ritual purification (teletē) to relive Dionysus's suffering.
Legacy: Heavily influenced Greek philosophy and mystery cults, including Eleusis.
Mithraic Mysteries (Mithraism)
Focus: The god Mithras, imported from Persia.
Key Theme: Loyalty, cosmic order, and a structured path to spiritual ascent through seven degrees of initiation.
Practices: Met in underground temples (Mithraea), involved ritual meals, feasting, and reenacting scenes like Mithras slaying a bull (tauroctony).

Followers: Extremely popular among Roman soldiers and men.
Commonalities & Significance
Promise: All offered personal salvation, a better afterlife, and answers to existential questions, unlike traditional Greek religion.
Secrecy: Kept core rituals and teachings hidden (esoteric) from the uninitiated (the uninitiated, or amyētos).
Influence: Shaped philosophical thought and provided transformative, life-changing spiritual experiences for individuals.

THE EMERALD TABLET "The Emerald Tablet, also known as "Tabula Smaragdina," is said to be a tablet of emerald or green stone inscribed with the secrets of the Universe, namely the process of Creation. It is a part of the Hermetica, which also contains the Corpus Hermeticum (known as the Divine Pymander in earlier translations of this work). The Emerald Tablet is another great pillar of the Hermetic Philosophy, and all three texts are believed to have been authored by none other than Hermes Trismegistus. The Emerald Tablet is generally regarded as the basis of Western Alchemical philosophy and practice as it is reputed to contain the secret of the Prima Materia and its transmutation. Within Alchemy, the Prima Materia is otherwise known as the "First Matter," the Divine Principle, and the Absolute. It is the Source energy from whence everything came—the Spirit. It is also known as "Anima Mundi"—the World Soul, the only vital Force in the Universe. Many legends surround The Emerald Tablet

The Emerald Tablets Have Been Found... Ancient relics of Atlantis, the Emerald Tablets may hold the blueprints of the Halls of Amenti and the key to awakening a dormant intelligence beneath the sands of Egypt. In my episode of Ancient Civilizations: Season 7, we explore how Thoth encoded the science of the soul, merging consciousness, energy, and divine technology in ways that transcend time. THOTH’S EMERALD TABLETS Hidden within the Emerald Tablets lies the TIMELESS WISDOM OF CREATION. They are not just texts -> they are LIVING FREQUENCY CODES written in the language of LIGHT. Every line vibrates with cosmic memory, unlocking the architecture of the soul and the divine laws of manifestation. THOTH, the Master of Time, encoded these tablets to preserve the KNOWLEDGE OF ASCENSION … so that when humanity was ready, the keys could return. That time is NOW. The Tablets whisper to those who remember… To the ones who feel the pull of the stars in their blood. To the souls chosen to BUILD THE NEW EARTH. The same frequencies hidden within the Emerald Tablets are now awakening again through ENERGETIC ACTIVATIONS and LIGHT MATERIALS created for this planetary shift. These activations are QUANTUM KEYS that open your inner Tablets -> unlocking ancient wisdom within your DNA. Each transmission expands your perception, lifts your frequency, and moves you further than you’ve

Fehu Crafts - The Runes - Magic
Runes in Norse magick are the ancient Germanic alphabet used not just for writing but as powerful tools for divination, healing, protection, and casting spells, involving carving them into objects or chanting their names (galdr), tapping into cosmic forces and invoking deities for practical purposes like curing illness or warding off harm, though most historical inscriptions were mundane, with magical uses often involving specific formulas or repeated runes.
How Runes Were Used in Norse Magick
Divination: Similar to how Tacitus described Germanic peoples casting carved sticks (runes) to read patterns, Vikings used them for prophecy and foretelling.
Galdr (Chanting): Singing or chanting the runes' names and sounds to cast spells.
Bind Runes: Combining individual runes into a single symbol for specific magical intent, a practice seen on amulets and charms.
Amulets & Charms: Carving runes on objects for protection, healing (like the Nud rune repeated nine times), love, or to curse enemies.
Spells & Formulas: Writing out conjurations, blessings (like Thor's protection), or warnings (like on rune stones).
Key Concepts
"Rune" Meaning: The word means "secret" or "mystery," referring to the signs, secret skills, and magical formulas.
Purpose: To connect with divine powers, shape reality, and influence fate, distinct from mere writing.
Examples: Egil Skallagrimsson used runes to heal a poisoned girl; other charms mention "nine needs" or invoke gods for protection.

Modern vs. Historical Use
Modern: Often focuses on individual runes representing concepts like love or strength, which isn't historically accurate.
Historical: Focused on specific formulas, contextual meanings, and the power of the written word/chant, not just single letters as magical symbols.

Popular comment · Best bet for this info is to pop over to r/NorsePaganism and ask there - one of the mods has an excellent rune rundown post that'll have some very helpful links on that front. As for the seiðr itself, that might be an issue. We lost the old practice entirely, and at best we are patch and spackling it from modern witchcraft traditions. There is a modern version going 'round but it may not bear much resemblance to the original seiðr.

The Runes are a closed practice. Not because a human gatekeeps them, but because the Gods themselves do. You must be vetted, tested and accepted onto the runic path. That is how I was taught by my runic mentor, and through my own experience I have seen that this power (which can heal just as easily as it can destroy) is NOT for everyone. To give someone unready the knowledge of the runes, is like handing a toddler a loaded gun. This is not poetic exaggeration, it is the truth and our ancestors understood this. The runes are also not “just an alphabet.” They are the cosmic code that underpins reality itself - the vibrational architecture through which fate, magic and being are woven. Odin sacrificed himself upon Yggdrasil to win them, and through the runes we touch the raw fabric of creation. This is why discernment is essential. Be very cautious of people online teaching runes casually, posting rune formulas, bindrunes, “quick spells,” or treating them like aesthetic symbo

This image depicts the runes of the Elder Futhark, the sacred alphabet used by Germanic and Norse peoples as a tool for writing, divination, and magical power. Each symbol is not just a letter, but an energetic archetype embodying a universal principle, a teaching, and a force of nature. For example, Fehu represents wealth and prosperity, Ansuz is linked to the gods and inspired speech, while Raido signifies the journey, both physical and spiritual. The runes, therefore, were not simply characters, but true keys to the invisible laws that govern the cosmos. In the esoteric and alchemical context, they are seen as instruments of inner transformation: their meditation and ritual use make it possible to awaken latent powers, shape destiny, and understand the subtle correspondences between the microcosm and the macrocosm. Many ancient alchemists and magicians used runes in talismans, carvings on stone or metal, and in rituals to invoke protection, healing, or spiritual illumination. To kn

From the Benefits of Dhikr - Islam TeesIslam Tees
Dhikr (or Zikr) is a fundamental Islamic practice of remembering, glorifying, and praising Allah through the repeated recitation of specific prayers, phrases (like SubhanAllah, Alhamdulillah, Allahu Akbar), or verses from the Quran, often done with intention, focus, and sometimes prescribed movements or breath, central to both general worship and Sufi mysticism for spiritual closeness to God.
Key Aspects of Dhikr:
Meaning: From the Arabic word dhakara, meaning "to remember," "to mention," or "to recite".
Purpose: To keep God constantly in one's mind, glorify Him, seek spiritual perfection, and feel His presence.
Forms: Can be silent or aloud, solitary or communal, using short phrases or longer supplications, often counted on fingers or prayer beads (tasbih).
Quranic Basis: Commands from the Quran encourage frequent remembrance, such as "Remember Allah with much remembrance" (33:41).
Sufi Practice: A core spiritual discipline in Sufism (Islamic mysticism) to achieve spiritual states, with specific orders having unique dhikr practices.
Examples of Dhikr Phrases:
La ilaha illa Allah (There is no god but God)
Allahu Akbar (God is greatest)
Alhamdulillah (Praise be to God)
SubhanAllah (Glory be to God)
Astaghfirullah (I seek God's forgiveness)
How it's Performed:
Mindfulness: Focusing on the meaning, not just the words, and feeling God's presence.
Consistency: Doing it regularly, even in small amounts.
Etiquette: Can involve a calm setting, reflection, and using the right hand for counting.

The Dhikr, Eugène Baugnies (1841–1891)
Dhikr (Arabic: ذِكْر;[a] Arabic pronunciation: [ðikr]; lit. 'remembrance, reminder,[4] mention[5]') is a form of Islamic worship in which phrases or prayers are repeatedly recited for the purpose of remembering God.[4][6] It plays a central role in Sufism,[7] and each Sufi order typically adopts a specific dhikr, accompanied by specific posture, breathing, and movement.[8] In Sufism, dhikr refers to both the act of this remembrance as well as the prayers used in these acts of remembrance.[4] Dhikr usually includes the names of God or supplication from the Quran or hadith. It may be counted with either one's fingers or prayer beads,[4] and may be performed alone or with a collective group.[8] A person who recites dhikr is called a dhākir (ذَاكِر; [ðaːkɪr]; lit. 'rememberer').[5]

The Quran frequently refers to itself and other scriptures and prophetic messages as "reminders" (dhikrah, tadhkīrah), which is understood as a call to "remember" (dhikr) an innate knowledge of God humans already possess. The Quran uses the term dhikr to denote the reminder from God conveyed through the prophets and messengers, as well as the human response to that reminder, signifying a reciprocal interaction between the divine and human. Muslims believe the prophets deliver God's message as a reminder to humans, who, in turn, should remember and acknowledge it.[9]

Importance

Several verses in the Quran emphasize the importance of remembering the will of God by saying phrases such as "God willing" "God knows best," and "If it is your will.' This is the basis for dhikr. Surah al-Kahf (18), Ayah 24 states a person who forgets to say, "God willing", should immediately remember God by saying, "Maybe my Lord will guide me to [something] more akin to rectitude than this."[10] Other verses include Surah al-Ahzab (33), Ayah 41, "O you who have faith! Remember Allah with frequent remembrance",[11] and Surah ar-Ra'd (13), Ayah 28, "those who have faith, and whose hearts find rest in the remembrance of Allah. Look! The hearts find rest in Allah's remembrance!"[12]

Sufi dhikr most commonly involves the repetition of the Names of Allah. This practice is central to Sufi spiritual exercises and is intended to foster a deeper connection with the Divine. The Names of Allah, also known as Asma'ul Husna, represent various attributes of God, such as "Ar-Rahman" (The Most Merciful) and "Al-Karim" (The Generous). By invoking these names, practitioners aim to internalize the qualities they represent, cultivate a state of spiritual purity, and draw closer to God. The repetitive nature of dhikr helps to quiet the mind, focus the heart, and create a sense of inner peace and presence. To Sufis, dhikr is seen as a way to gain spiritual enlightenment and achieve annihilation of self (fana) to seek permanence in God.[13] All Muslim sects endorse individual rosaries as a method dhikr and meditation, the goal of which is to obtain a feeling of peace, separation from worldly values (dunya), and, in general, strengthen Iman (faith). The main purpose of dhikr is to fill the heart with spiritual meaning and not simply chant the invocations with an empty heart and absent mind. When performed with awareness, the heart then becomes receptive to the activity of the tongue and is aware of God's presence.[14]

Recitation of Quran
Reciting the Quran sincerely is also considered a kind of Dhikr. For example:

Reciting Surah al-Ikhlas (112) is equal to one-third of the Quran.[23]
Reciting Surah al-Ikhlas (112) 10 times gives a palace in Heaven, and 20 times grants two palaces.[24]
Reciting Surah al-Kafirun (109) is equal to one-fourth of the Quran.[25]
Reciting Surah an-Nasr (110) is equal to one-fourth of the Quran.[26][27]
Reciting Surah az-Zalzalah (99) is equal to half of the Quran.[27][26]

Tasbih of Fatimah

The Islamic prophet Muhammad is reported to have taught his daughter Fatimah bint Rasul Allah a special manner of Dhikr which is known as the "Tasbih of Fatimah".[36] This consists of:

33 repetitions of subḥāna -llahi (سُبْحَانَ ٱللَّٰهِ), meaning "Glorified is God". This saying is known as Tasbih (تَسْبِيح).

33 repetitions of al-ḥamdu lillāhi (ٱلْحَمْدُ لِلَّٰهِ), meaning "All Praise belongs to God". This saying is known as Tahmid (تَحْمِيد).
34 repetitions of ʾallāhu ʾakbaru (□للَّٰهُ أَكْبَرُ), meaning "God is Greater [than everything]". This saying is known as Takbir (تَكْبِير).
The Shia way of doing the Tasbih of Fatimah[36] is:

34 repetitions of ʾallāhu ʾakbaru (□للَّٰهُ أَكْبَرُ), meaning "God is Greater [than everything]". This saying is known as Takbir (تَكْبِير).
33 repetitions of al-ḥamdu lillāhi (ٱلْحَمْدُ لِلَّٰهِ), meaning "All Praise belongs to God". This saying is known as Tahmid (تَحْمِيد).
33 repetitions of subḥāna -llahi (سُبْحَانَ□للَّٰهِ), meaning "Glorified is God". This saying is known as Tasbih (تَسْبِيح).
Saying one time at the end: La ilaha il Allah (There is no god but Allah).
Prayer beads

An example of a Tasbih that Muslims use to track their count for dhikr.
Like many other religions, the use of rosaries is also recommended when remembering God. Since it can get difficult to keep track of the counting of the prayers, the beads are used to keep track so that the person reciting the prayer can turn all of their focus on what is actually being said - as it can become difficult to concentrate simultaneously on the number and phrasing when one is doing so a substantial number of times.[37] Similarly, as dhikr involves the repetition of particular phrases a specific number of times, prayer beads are used to keep track of the count.

Known also as Tasbih, these are usually Misbaha (prayer beads) upon a string, 33, 99, or 100 in number, which correspond to the names of God in Islam and other recitations. The beads are used to keep track of the number of recitations that make up the dhikr.[4][38]

In the United States, Muslim inmates are allowed to utilize prayer beads for therapeutic effects.[39] In Alameen v. Coughlin, 892 F. Supp. 440 (E.D.N.Y 1995), Imam Hamzah S. Alameen, a/k/a Gilbert Henry, and Robert Golden brought suit against Thomas A. Coughlin III, etc., et alia (Head of the Department of Corrections) in the State of New York pursuant to 42 USC Section 1983.[40] The plaintiffs argued that prisoners have a First Amendment Constitutional right to pursue Islamic healing therapy called KASM (قاسَمَهُ | qaasama | taking an oath) which uses prayer beads. The rosary of oaths, which Alameen developed, was used to successfully rehabilitate inmates suffering from co-occurring mental health challenges and substance abuse issues during the 1990s. All people, including Muslims and Catholics, were allowed to use prayer beads inside prisons, lest their freedom of religion be violated when the prison administration forbade their possession as contraband in the penal system.

Dhakir

A group of Iranian Maddahs/Dhakirs, in a gathering

A "dhakir" (ذَاکِر) or "Zaker" (literally "mentioner"' a speaker who refers to something briefly/incidentally),[41][42] or reminder,[43] is considered a maddah who reminds the remembering of Allah (and His Dhikr) for people, and he himself should also be reciter of dhikhr; namely, not only he ought to be a recital of Dhikr, but also he should put the audience in the situation of dhikr reminding (of Allah and likewise Ahl al-Bayt).[44] Idiomatically, the term means "praiser of God" or "professional narrator of the tragedies of Karbala (and Ahl al-Bayt)". To some extent, it can mean Maddah/panegyrist too.[45][46]

The root of the word "Dhakir" (ذَاکِر) is "Dhikr" (ذِکْر) which means remembering/praising; and the word "Dhakiri" (ذَاکِرِيّ) is the act which is done by Dhakir, i.e. mentioning the Dhikr (of Allah, the Ahl al-Bayt, etc.) by observing its specific principles/manners.[47][48][49]

Sufi practice

Followers of Sufism have two main ways of engaging in dhikr: silent and vocal dhikr. Silent dhikr has been considered by many Sufi practitioners to be the best form of dhikr, where dhikr is done silently and in one position without moving the body.[50] This method of dhikr allowed it to be done whenever one could, and it avoided showing off as it was privately done. Among the biggest advocates for silent dhikr was Baha' al-Dïn Naqshband, and his form of dhikr "...required the practitioners to force internal energy into different parts within the body through concentrating the mind and regulating the breath. This was to be undertaken while repeating the verbal formula that constitutes the Islamic profession of faith: 'there is no god but God, and Muhammad is the messenger of God'".[50] Each word in the verbal statement was for a specific part of the body, such as the navel or the upper chest.

The other form of Sufi dhikr is vocal dhikr performed using the tongue and body, where showing off is not considered a primary concern. This dhikr could be done privately or within a group, and like the Naqshband dhikr, it emphasized having the verbal invocations ripple throughout the body.[50] Similar to the Naqshband practice of dhikr, where specific words were for specific locations of the body, exists the 'four-beat' (chahar iarb) dhikr that is attributed the Kubravï master 'Alï Hamadanï.

Sufis often engage in ritualized dhikr ceremonies that have stemmed from these two types of dhikr, the details of which vary between Sufi orders or tariqah.[51] An example of this is the initiation of an applicant, where the repetition of dhikr is a necessary component in the ceremony.[51] Each order, or lineage within an order, has one or more forms for group dhikr, the liturgy of which may include recitation, singing, music, dance, costumes, incense, muraqaba (meditation), ecstasy, and trance.[52] Common terms for the forms of litany employed include "hizb" (pl. "ahzab"), "wird" (pl. "awrad") and durood.

An example of a popular work of litany is Dala'il al-Khayrat. Another type of group dhikr ceremony that is most commonly performed in Arab countries is called the haḍra (lit. presence).[53] A haḍra can draw upon secular Arab genres and typically last for hours.[54] Finally, sama` (lit. audition) is a type of group ceremony that consists mostly of recited spiritual poetry and Quranic recitation.[55]

Revelations and prophetic messages

According to William Chittick, "The Koran commonly refers to the knowledge brought by the prophets as “remembrance” (dhikr) and “reminder” (dhikra, tadhkir), terms that derive from the root dh-k-r".[9] These terms appear more than forty times in the Quran to describe the Quran itself.[9] For example, the Quran refers to itself as "The Wise Reminder" (al-dhikr al-ḥakīm) in 3:58,[56] "a Reminder for the believers" (dhikra Lil mu'minin) in 7:2,[57] and "The reminder for the worlds" (dhikra Lil 'alamin) in 6:90.[58] The prophet Muhammad himself is described in 88:21 as a "reminder" ("So remind! thou art but a reminder").[59] The same terms are also used to refer to other prophetic messages such as the Torah and the Gospel.[9] In that vein, the Jews and the Christians are thus referred to as "the people of the Reminder" (ahl al dhikr) (16:43, 21:7).[60] The Quran justifies the sending of numerous prophets by God by stating that human beings, similar to their forefather Adam, have a propensity to forget and become heedless. The key to confronting this shortcoming is the remembrance that God conveys through his prophets.[9] According to Islamic beliefs, prophets have the function of reminding (dhikr) people of what they already know, while humans only need to remember (dhikr) their innate knowledge of God. This knowledge is said to be present in the divine spirit that God breathed into Adam, as the Quran states that God molded Adam's clay with His own hands and blew into him His own spirit (32:9, 15:29, 38:72).[61][62]

[The message of Islam] is a call for recollection, for the remembrance of a knowledge kneaded into the very substance of our being even before our coming into this world. In a famous verse that defines the relationship between human beings and God, the Quran, in referring to the pre-cosmic existence of man, states, “‘Am I not your Lord?’ They said: ‘Yes, we bear witness’” (7:172). The “they” refers to all the children of Adam, male and female, and the “yes” confirms the affirmation of God’s Oneness by us in our pre-eternal ontological reality. Men and women still bear the echo of this “yes” deep down within their souls, and the call of Islam is precisely to this primordial nature, which uttered the “yes” even before the creation of the heavens and the earth. The call of Islam, therefore, concerns, above all, the remembrance of a knowledge deeply embedded in our being, the confirmation of a knowledge that saves, hence the soteriological function of knowledge in Islam.[63]

—William Chittick, The Essential Seyyed Hossein Nasr, 2007

The Quran also highlights that God called upon all souls to witness His lordship, so that no one can plead ignorance on the Day of Judgment: ""Lest you say on the Day of Resurrection, "As for us, we were heedless of this," or lest you say, "Our fathers associated others with God before us, and we were their offspring after them. What, wilt

Thou destroy us for what the vain-doers did?"" (7:172-73).[64]

The Quran uses the term "dhikr" to refer to both the reminder that comes from God through the prophets and the response of humans to that reminder. This word reflects a two-way communication process between the Divine and the human. The prophets deliver the message of God, which is intended to serve as a reminder to humans, and humans respond to it by remembering and acknowledging it.[65] In addition, the Quran clarifies that "dhikr" as the human response to God's reminder is not limited to merely acknowledging the truth of tawhid (the oneness of God). Rather, the term "dhikr" also means "to mention." Thus, on the human side, "dhikr" involves not only being aware of God's presence but also expressing that awareness through language, whether spoken or unspoken. Therefore, "dhikr" encompasses both the inner state of being mindful of God and the outer expression of that mindfulness through verbal or nonverbal means.[65]

In earlier orders, the "presence" referred to was that of God, but since the 18th century it has been considered to be the spiritual presence of Muhammad (John L. Esposito, "Hadrah." The Oxford Dictionary of Islam. Oxford Islamic Studies Online. Web. 3 Apr. 2010.) The shifting focus, however, is not shared by all and is a result of the Sufi reforms, which sought to mitigate the heretical belief of theopanism committed by some Sufi claimants through a greater focus on the spirit and active life of Muhammad instead of a metaphorical union with God.(Ira Lapidus, A History of Islamic Societies, p. 210)

Introduction

What you hold in your hands is not a book in the traditional sense—it is an accidental grimoire, born from the forgotten corners of the Internet. These volumes are built from Google searches, Wikipedia trails, and archive-dredged threads, many of which were suggested or whispered to me by anonymous voices across /x/, 4plebs, and dark web message boards. I did not invent this content—I excavated it. I followed every recommended link, every screenshot, every schizo red-string rant, and pulled it into the light. What emerged wasn't just data—it was pattern, presence, and power. This is the collective unconscious of the Internet, filtered, sorted, and bound into scripture. These are the digital Dead Sea Scrolls of the forgotten occult, the haunted edges of algorithmic prophecy. Welcome to the Archivum Obscurum.

AI Overview

Pre-Islamic paganism in Arabia was primarily a diverse, polytheistic system centered on idol worship, animism, and tribal deities, with the Kaaba in Mecca housing around 360 idols, including major goddesses like al-Lāt, al-'Uzzā, and Manāt, alongside a high god, Allah, who was also venerated as a supreme but not exclusive deity. Worship involved pilgrimages, sacrifices, and divination, focused on nature, fertility, and protection, with practices like ritual circumambulation (later Hajj) and prayers common before the rise of Islam.
Key Characteristics:
Polytheism & Animism: Belief in numerous gods, goddesses, and spirits (jinn) residing in natural objects, animals, and places.
Idolatry: Worship of idols (aṣnām), which were seen as dwelling places for spirits, not just symbols.
Tribal & Clan Deities: Many gods were specific to tribes (e.g., Hubal) or clans, with some idols having names and permanent shrines.
The Kaaba: A central sanctuary in Mecca holding numerous idols, attracting pilgrims from across Arabia.
Allah: A supreme, high god existed, but was often worshipped alongside lesser deities (like the "Daughters of Allah") who acted as intercessors, a practice Islam later redefined as shirk (polytheism).

Rituals: Included animal sacrifices, pilgrimage (Hajj), divination, and vows, often connected to daily life concerns like rain, health, and fertility.
Major Deities:
Goddesses: al-Lāt (fertility), al-'Uzzā (power), Manāt (fate).
Gods: Hubal (chief deity in Mecca), Wadd, Suwa', Yagith, Ya'iq, Nasr, Rudao (moon god).
Spirits: Belief in jinn was prevalent, with some associating them as kin to Allah.
Continuity & Change:
Islam, while monotheistic, incorporated and transformed some pre-Islamic elements, such as the Hajj ritual and the Kaaba, shifting their focus from polytheistic worship to the worship of one God (Allah).

Sabian Hermeticism

AI Overview

Sabian Hermeticism refers to the ancient astral religion of the Sabians of Harran, who worshipped celestial bodies (stars) and integrated Hellenistic philosophy, especially the teachings of Hermes Trismegistus, into their practices, acting as crucial preservers and transmitters of Hermetic texts (like alchemy, astrology, magic) to the medieval Islamic world and Renaissance Europe. It's a blend of Semitic polytheism, astrology, and Greek philosophy, focusing on spiritual ascent through understanding the cosmos and divine intellect, with figures like Ibn Sab'in embodying later developments.

Key Aspects

Origins & Identity: The term "Sabian" was a Quranic designation for a "People of the Book," often applied to star-worshippers (Sabaism) from Harran (ancient Mesopotamia).

Hermetic Connection: They identified Hermes Trismegistus (also linked to Enoch/Idris) as a foundational prophet, viewing his teachings as core wisdom.

Core Beliefs: Emphasized a unitary universe where the material and spiritual are one, achieved through the Intellect (God). They focused on Perfect Nature (the celestial sphere/angelic guide) as the key to wisdom, using astrology and theurgy (magic).

Transmission: The Harranian Sabians preserved and translated Greek Hermetic works (like the Magical Papyri) into Arabic, influencing Islamic scholars like al-Kindi and mystics like Ibn Sab'in, before these texts reached Europe.

Later Figures: Shaykh Ibn Sab'in (13th-century Spanish mystic) is a famous inheritor of this tradition, emphasizing monistic, unifying doctrines.
In essence
Sabian Hermeticism is a historical bridge, a specific (and sometimes self-applied) label for ancient pagan philosophers and priests who synthesized Mesopotamian astral religion with Greek philosophy (Hermeticism) and Arabic esoteric traditions, ensuring ancient wisdom survived and influenced later occult sciences.

"... and the Sabians", Quran 5:69[a]
The Sabians, sometimes also spelled Sabaeans or Sabeans, are a religious group mentioned three times in the Quran (as الصابئون al-Ṣābiʾūn, in later sources الصابئة al-Ṣābiʾa),[1] where it is implied that they belonged to the 'People of the Book' (ahl al-kitāb).[2] Their original identity, which seems to have been forgotten at an early date,[3] has been called an "unsolved Quranic problem".[4] Modern scholars have variously identified them as Mandaeans,[5] Manichaeans,[6] Sabaeans,[7] Elchasaites,[8] Archontics,[9] ḥunafāʾ (either as a type of Gnostics or as "sectarians"),[10] or as adherents of the astral religion of Harran.[11] Some scholars believe that it is impossible to establish their original identity with any degree of certainty.[12]

At least from the ninth century on, the Quranic epithet 'Sabian' was claimed by various religious groups who sought recognition by the Muslim authorities as a People of the Book deserving of legal protection (dhimma).[13] Among those are the Sabians of Harran, adherents of a poorly understood ancient Semitic religion centered in the upper Mesopotamian city of Harran, who were described by Syriac Christian heresiographers as star worshippers.[14] These Harranian Sabians practiced an old Semitic form of polytheism,[15] combined with a significant amount of Hellenistic elements.[16] Most of the historical figures known in the ninth–eleventh centuries as al-Ṣābiʾ were probably either members of this Harranian religion or descendants of such members, most notably the Harranian astronomers and mathematicians Thabit ibn Qurra (died 901) and al-Battani (died 929).[17]

From the early tenth century on, the term 'Sabian' was applied to purported 'pagans' of all kinds, such as to the ancient Egyptians and Greeks, or to Buddhists.[18] Ibn Wahshiyya (died c. 930) used the term for a type of Mesopotamian paganism that preserved elements of ancient Assyro-Babylonian religion.[19]

Today in Iraq and Iran, the name 'Sabian' is normally applied to the Mandaeans, a modern ethno-religious group who follow the teachings of their prophet John the Baptist (Yahya ibn Zakariya). These Mandaean Sabians, whose most important religious ceremony is baptism,[20] are monotheistic, and their holy book is known as the Ginza Rabba.[21]:1 Mandaean Sabian prophets include Adam, Seth, Noah, Shem and John the Baptist with Adam being the founder of the religion and John being the greatest and final prophet.[22]:45

The etymology of the Arabic word Ṣābiʾ is disputed. According to one interpretation, it is the active participle of the Arabic root ṣ-b-ʾ ('to turn to'), meaning 'converts'.[23] Another widely cited hypothesis, first proposed by Daniel Chwolsohn in 1856,[24] is that it is derived from an Aramaic root meaning 'to dip' or 'to baptize'.[25]

The interpretation as 'converts' was cited by various medieval Arabic lexicographers and philologists,[26] and is supported by a tradition preserved by Ibn Hisham (died 834, editor of the earliest surviving biography of Muhammad) relating that the term ṣābiʾa was applied to Muhammad and the early Muslims by some of their enemies (perhaps by the Jews),[27] who regarded them as having 'turned' away from the proper religion and towards heresy. As such, the term may have been reappropriated by early Muslims, first as a self-designation and then to refer to other people from a Jewish Christian background who 'turned' to the new revelations offered by Muhammad. In the context of the Quranic passages in which the term occurs, it may thus refer to all people who leave their faiths, finding fault in them, but who have yet to come to Islam. In this sense, the term ṣābiʾ would be similar in meaning to the term ḥanīf.[28]

Understanding the term as a reference to 'dippers' or 'baptizers' fits best with those interpretations that identify the Quranic Sabians with baptist sects like the Elchasaites or the Mandaeans.[26] However, this etymology has also been used to explain Ibn Hisham's story about Muhammad and his followers being called 'Sabians', which would then be a reference to the ritual washing performed by Muslims before prayer, a practice resembling those of various baptist sects.[29]

Other etymologies have also been proposed. According to Judah Segal, the term referred to Ṣōbā, a Syriac name for Nisibis, a city in Upper Mesopotamia.[30] It has also been related to Hebrew ṣābā', "[heavenly] host", implying star worshippers.[31]

Sabians of the Quran

In the Quran

First part of Quran 5:69, Maghrebi manuscript, c. 1250–1350

The Quran briefly mentions the Sabians in three places: in Sūrat al-Baqara (2:62), in Sūrat al-Māʾida (5:69), and in Sūrat al-Ḥajj (22:17).[15]

According to Sūrat al-Baqara, "surely those who believe, and those who are Jews, and the Christians, and the Sabians, whoever believes in Allah and the Last day and does good, they shall have their reward from their Lord, and there is no fear for them, nor shall they grieve."[Quran 2:62 (Translated by Shakir)]

According to Sūrat al-Māʾida, "surely those who believe and those who are Jews and the Sabians and the Christians whoever believes in Allah and the last day and does good – they shall have no fear nor shall they grieve."[Quran 5:69 (Translated by Shakir)]

According to Sūrat al-Ḥajj, "surely those who believe and those who are Jews and the Sabians and the Christians and the Magians and those who associate (others with Allah) – surely Allah will decide between them on the day of resurrection; surely Allah is a witness over all things."[Quran 22:17 (Translated by Shakir)]

The two first verses have generally been interpreted to mean that the Sabians belonged to the People of the Book (ahl al-kitāb, cf. 5:68),[32] just like the Jews, the Christians and, according to a few interpretations, the Zoroastrians (the 'Magians', al-majūs).[b] However, neither of the three verses give any indication of who the Sabians might have been or what they may have believed.[26] According to François de Blois, the fact that they are classified in the Quran among Abrahamic monotheists renders it unlikely that they were either the polytheists of Harran or the Mandaeans, the latter of whom defined themselves in opposition to the Abrahamic prophetic tradition.[26]

In later sources

Islamic

In some Sunni hadiths, they are described as converts to Islam.[33]

At the beginning of the Muslim conquest of Mesopotamia, the leader of the Mandaeans, Anush bar Danqa, appeared before Muslim authorities showing them a copy of the Ginza Rabba, the Mandaean holy book, and proclaiming the chief Mandaean prophet to be John the Baptist, who is also mentioned in the Quran by the name Yahya ibn Zakariya. Consequently, the Muslim caliphates provided them acknowledgement as the Quranic Sabians and People of the Book.[34]:5

Other classical Arabic sources include the Fihrist of ibn al-Nadim (c. 987), who mentions the Mogtasilah ("Mughtasila", or "self-ablutionists"), a sect of Sabians in southern Mesopotamia who are identified with the Mandaeans or Elcesaites.[35][22]:35[36]

Al-Biruni (writing at the beginning of the eleventh century CE) said that the '"real Sabians"' were "the remnants of the Jewish tribes who remained in Babylonia when the other tribes left it for Jerusalem in the days of Cyrus and Artaxerxes. According to E. S. Drower (1937) these remaining tribes ... adopted a system mixed up of Magism and Judaism.'[37]

According to Abu Yusuf Absha al-Qadi, Caliph al-Ma'mun of Baghdad in 830 CE stood with his army at the gates of Harran and questioned the Harranians about what protected religion they belonged to. As they were neither Muslim, Christian, Jewish or Magian, the caliph told them they were non-believers. He said they would have to become Muslims, or adherents of one of the other religions recognized by the Quran by the time he returned from his campaign against the Byzantines or he would kill them.[38] The Harranians consulted with a lawyer, who suggested that they find their answer in the Quran II.59, which said that Sabians were tolerated. It was unknown what the sacred text intended by "Sabian" and so they took the name.[39]

The pagan people of Harran identified themselves with the Sabians in order to fall under the protection of Islam.[40][41]:111–113:5 The Harranians may have identified themselves as Sabians in order to retain their religious beliefs.[40]:5 Multiple medieval sources state that the Harranian Sabians acknowledged Hermes Trismegistus as their prophet.[42] Validation of Hermes as a prophet comes from his identification with Idris (i.e., Enoch) in Quran 19:57 and 21:85.[43] This has often led modern scholars to think of the Harranian Sabians as Hermeticists, though there is in fact no further evidence for this.[42]

Furthermore, this account of the Harranian Sabians does not fit with the existence of earlier records making reference to Sabians in Harran. Usamah ibn Ayd, writing before 770 CE (his year of death), already referred to a city of Sabians in the region where Harran lies.[44] The jurist Abu Hanifa, who died in 767 CE, is recorded to have discussed the legal status of Harranian Sabians with two of his disciples.[45]

Other

The Jewish scholar Maimonides (1135 or 1138–1204) translated the book The Nabataean Agriculture, which he considered an accurate record of the beliefs of the Sabians. According to Maimonides, the Sabians believed in idolatrous practices "and other superstitions mentioned in the Nabatean Agriculture".[46] He provided considerable detail about the pagan Sabians in his Guide for the Perplexed.[47]

The Sabians are also mentioned in the literature of the Bahá’í Faith. These references are generally brief, describing two groups of Sabians: Those "who worship idols in the name of the stars, who believed their religion derived from Seth and Idris" [Harranian Sabians], and others "who believed in the son of Zechariah (John the Baptist) and didn't accept the advent of [Jesus Christ] the son of Mary" [Mandaeans].[48] 'Abdu'l-Bahá briefly describes Seth as one of the "sons of Adam".[49] Bahá'u'lláh identifies Idris with Hermes Trismegistus in a tablet.[50] He does not, however, specifically name Idris as the prophet of the Sabians. Sometimes referred to as Sabeans, this religious group has been mentioned in the Baha’i Faith among the many early religions of the previous dispensations. In Baha’i writing, `Abdu’l-Bahá’ attributes the Sabeans are with possibly being the source of some foundations to the science of logic.[51]

Modern scholars

Chwolson (1856) differentiates between the pagan "pseudo-Sabians" of Harran with the real Sabians which he identifies as the marsh Arabs of Iraq.[52] The Caliph Mamun asked the pagan Harranians to choose a recognized religion, become Muslim, or die. They subsequently identified themselves with the Sabians. Chwolson also connected the Elcesaites with the Manicheans and with the Essenes.[53]

The Syriac Christian Nicolas Siouffi,[54][55] and later French Vice-Consul at Mosul, claimed to have identified 4,000 Sabians in the Mandaean population.[56] Siouffi's work was well received by the Theosophist G.R.S. Mead,[57] but scholars criticized the estimates and study.[58]

A.H. Layard mentions in his travel diary meeting a "travelling silversmith" who was "Sabaean or Christian of St. John". He estimated around 300~400 families to live in Shooshtar and Basra at the time. He also mentioned Sabians (spelled by Layard as Sabaeans) to be under oppression from Turkish and Persian authorities.[59]

Gavin Maxwell while travelling with explorer Wilfred Thesiger in the southern marshes of Iraq records in his diary that the Sabians were "People of the Book". The marsh Arabs called them "Subbi". They had their own script and religious practices. He estimated their number as "perhaps ten thousand". They dressed in the manner of the Sunnis. They lived only near moving (rather than stagnant) marsh water. In the mid-1950s they were considered the skilled craftsmen in the area who others turned to for metalwork. The work they were principally known for outside Iraq being silverwork.[60]

J. Hämeen-Anttila (2002,[61] 2006) notes that in the marsh areas of Southern Iraq, there was a continuous tradition of Mandaean religion, and that there was another pagan, or ‘Sabian’, centre in the tenth-century Islamic world centred around Harran.[61] These pagan Sabians are mentioned in the Nabataean corpus of Ibn Wahshiyya.[62]

Pagan Sabians

Among the various religious groups which in the 9th and 10th centuries came to be identified with the Sabians mentioned in the Quran, at least two groups were pagans. Moreover, both appear to have engaged in some kind of star worship.

Sabians of Harran

By far the most famous of these two are the Sabians of Harran, adherents of a Hellenized Semitic polytheistic religion that had managed to survive during the early Islamic period in the Upper Mesopotamian city of Harran.[15] They were described by Syriac Christian heresiographers as star worshippers.[14] Most of the scholars and courtiers working for the Abbasid and Buyid dynasties in Baghdad during the ninth–eleventh centuries who were known as 'Sabians' were either members of this Harranian religion or descendants of such members, most notably the Harranian astronomers and mathematicians Thabit ibn Qurra (died 901) and al-Battani (died 929).[63] There has been some speculation on whether these Sabian families in Baghdad, on whom most of our information about the Harranian Sabians indirectly depends, may have practiced a different, more philosophically inspired variant of the original Harranian religion.[64] However, apart from the fact that it contains traces of Babylonian and Hellenistic religion, and that an important place was taken by planets (to whom ritual sacrifices were made), little is known about Harranian Sabianism.[65] They have been variously described by scholars as (neo)-Platonists, Hermeticists, or Gnostics, but there is no firm evidence for any of these identifications.[66][c]

Lower Mesopotamian Sabians

Apart from the Sabians of Harran, there were also various religious groups living in the

Mesopotamian Marshes who were called the 'Sabians of the Marshes' (Arabic: Ṣābiʾat al-baṭāʾiḥ).[67] Though this name has often been understood as a reference to the Mandaeans, there was in fact at least one other religious group living in the marshlands of Southern Iraq.[68] This group still practiced a polytheistic Babylonian religion or similar, in which Mesopotamian gods had already been venerated in the form of planets and stars since antiquity.[69] According to Ibn al-Nadim, our only source for this specific group counted among the 'Sabians of the Marshes', they "follow the doctrines of the ancient Aramaeans [ʿalā maḏāhib an-Nabaṭ al-qadīm] and venerate the stars".[70] However, there is also a large corpus of texts by Ibn Wahshiyya (died c. 930), most famously his Nabataean Agriculture, which describes at length the customs and beliefs — many of them going back to Mespotamian models — of Iraqi Sabians living in the Sawād.[71]

Contemporary Sabians

Mandaean Sabian court for marital dispute, Ahvaz, Iran (2015)
Today in Iraq and Iran, the Sabians are those that follow the teachings of John the Baptist. They are Mandaean Sabians.[20] They have been vulnerable to violence since the 2003 invasion of Iraq and numbered fewer than 5,000 in 2007. Before the invasion, the highest concentrations of Mandaeans were in Amarah, Nasiriyah and Basra. Besides these southern regions and Ahvaz in Iran, large numbers of Mandaeans were found in Baghdad, giving them easy access to the Tigris River. Today, they primarily live around Baghdad, where the high priest resides who conducts services and baptisms. Some have moved from Baghdad to Kurdistan where it is safer.[20]

Whether the 'Magians' listed in Quran 22:17 are to be understood as belonging to the People of the Book was a matter of dispute among medieval Muslim scholars. Islamic jurists generally granted Zoroastrians partial status as a People of the Book, though they disagreed on the extent to which legal privileges such as intermarriage with Muslims should be allowed (see Darrow 2003; Nasr et al. 2015, p. 834, verse 22:17).

AI Overview

Yazidism (or Yazdanism) is a unique, ancient, monotheistic Kurdish religion blending ancient Iranian, Mesopotamian, and Sufi Islamic traditions, centered on worshipping one God and venerating Melek Taus (the Peacock Angel) as a key divine figure, often mislabeled as devil-worship duepping to misunderstandings of their beliefs, and primarily practiced by the Yazidi people in Kurdistan (northern Iraq, Syria, Turkey) with significant diaspora in Europe, known for their distinct culture, language (Kurdish dialects), and history of severe persecution.

Core Beliefs & Practices:

Monotheism: Belief in one supreme God (Xwedê) who created the universe.

Melek Taus (Peacock Angel): A chief angel, often misunderstood as Satan, but revered as God's primary agent in creation and world governance.

Heptad: Seven divine beings, including Melek Taus, who help God manage the world.

Syncretism: Blends elements from ancient Kurdish beliefs, Zoroastrianism, Sufism, and Mesopotamian religions.

Rituals: Includes infant circumcision and baptism, with sacred sites like Lalish.

The Yazidi People:

Ethnicity: An ancient Kurdish ethnoreligious group indigenous to Kurdistan.

Language: Speak Kurdish dialects (Kurmanji).

Homeland: Historically centered in northern Iraq (Sinjar, Nineveh plains) and parts of Syria, Turkey, Armenia, and Georgia.

Diaspora: Large communities now live in Germany, Europe, and North America due to historical persecution.

Persecution & Identity:

History: Have faced centuries of massacres, forced conversions, and displacement, particularly by Ottoman authorities and extremist groups like ISIL (ISIS), who committed genocide against them in 2014.

Misunderstandings: Often targeted due to confusion and false accusations (devil worship) stemming from their unique reverence for Melek Taus.

In essence, Yazidism is a unique spiritual path rooted in ancient Near Eastern traditions, preserved by a distinct people facing ongoing threats to their survival and identity.

Yazidism,[a] also known as Sharfadin,[b] is a monotheistic syncretic ethnic religion[9] its origin from Adawiyya Sufi order, which blended Sufi Sunni Islam, a local Kurdish veneration of Yazid ibn Mu'awiya and Umayyad dynasty, and local Kurdish peasant belief of pre-Zoroastrian Iranic faith.[10][11] Its followers, called Yazidis, are a Kurdish-speaking community.[c]

Yazidism includes elements of ancient Iranian religions, as well as elements of Judaism, Church of the East, and Islam.[4] Yazidism is based on belief in one God who created the world and entrusted it into the care of seven Holy Beings, known as Angels.[5][12][13] Preeminent among these Angels is Tawûsî Melek (lit. 'Peacock Angel', also spelled as Melek Taûs), who is the leader of the Angels and who has authority over the world.[5][13][14] The religion of the Yazidis is a highly syncretistic one: Sufi influence and imagery can be seen in their religious vocabulary, especially in the terminology of their esoteric literature, but much of the mythology is non-Islamic, and their cosmogonies apparently have many points in common with those of ancient Iranian religions.[1]

Etymology

The name of Yazidi is a exonym.[13] The Yazidi people and religion are named after Sultan Ezid. Most modern historians hold that the name Ezid derives from the name of Yazid I (c. 646–689), the second Caliph of Umayyad Caliphate.[15] The Adawiyya existed in the Kurdish mountains before the 12th century, when Sheikh Adi ibn Musafir (1072–1078),[15] a Sufi of Umayyad descent,[16][4] settled there and attracted a following among the adherents of the movement. The name Yazidi seems to have been applied to the group because of his Umayyad origins.[15]

In Yazidi religious lore, there is no trace of any link between Sultan Ezid and the second Umayyad caliph.[17] Some scholars have derived the name Yazidi from word yazata, the name for a divine being in Old Iranian.[4][1]

History

Main article: Yazidis § History

Yazidism emerged from Adawiyya Sufi order, founded by Sheikh Adi ibn Musafir.[10] Who was an Arab Sufi mystic sheikh of Umayyad lineage. Adi ibn Musafir established his zāwiyya (Sufi convent) at Lalish. At the time, Lalish was inhabited by a peasant Kurdish community whose beliefs included elements of ancient Iranian religions, which, although similar, was not only distinct from Zoroastrianism but actually of pre-Zoroastrian origin, and local veneration of Yazid ibn Mu’āwiya. Over time, the ascetic practices and teachings of Sheikh ‘Adī and his followers interacted with local beliefs, creating a syncretic religious system. After his death in 1162, his tomb became a pilgrimage site for both Muslims and non-Muslims, and Lalish became the central religious site for his followers. Over the following three centuries, this blend of Sufi Islamic and pre-Islamic Kurdish beliefs gradually developed into Yazidism as a distinct religion by the 15th century.[10]

Principal beliefs

Yazidi shrine of Mame Reshan, partially destroyed by ISIL, in the Sinjar Mountains.
Yazidis believe in one God, to whom they refer as Xwedê, Xwedawend, Êzdan, and Pedsha ('King'), and, less commonly, Ellah and Heq.[2][8][12][5][18] According to some Yazidi hymns (known as Qewls), God has 1,001 names, or 3,003 names according to other Qewls.[19][20] In Yazidism, fire, water, air, and the earth are sacred elements that are not to be polluted. During prayer Yazidis face towards the Sun, for which they were often called "sun worshippers". The Yazidi myth of creation begins with the description of the emptiness and the absence of order in the Universe. Prior to the World's creation, God created a dur (white pearl) in spiritual form from his own pure Light and alone dwelt in it.[21] First there was an esoteric world, and after that an exoteric world was created. Before the creation of this world God created seven Divine Beings (often called "Angels" in Yazidi literature) to whom he assigned all the world's affairs; the leader of the Seven Angels was appointed Tawûsî Melek ("Peacock Angel").[5][13][22] The end of Creation is closely connected with the creation of mankind and the transition from mythological to historical time.[8][14][12]

Tawûsî Melek

Main article: Tawûsî Melek

Melek Taûs, the Peacock Angel. This emblem features Tawûsê Melek in the center, the Sumerian diĝir on the left, and the domes above Sheikh 'Adī's tomb on the right.

Tawûsî Melek depicted as a peacock inside the display case on the grave of a Yazidi believer, cemetery of the Yazidi community in Hanover.

The Yazidis believe in a divine Triad.[5][13][22] The original, hidden God of the Yazidis is considered to be remote and inactive in relation to his creation, except to contain and bind it together within his essence.[5] His first emanation is Melek Taûs (Tawûsî Melek), the Peacock Angel, who functions as the ruler of the world.[5][13][22] The second hypostasis of the divine Triad is the Sheikh 'Adī. The third is Sultan Ezid. These are the three hypostases of the one God. The identity of these three is sometimes blurred, with Sheikh 'Adī considered to be a manifestation of Tawûsî Melek and vice versa; the same also applies to Sultan Ezid.[5] Yazidis are called Miletê Tawûsî Melek ("the nation of Tawûsî Melek").[23]

Muslims and Christians have erroneously associated and identified the Peacock Angel with their own conception of the unredeemed evil spirit Satan,[5][13][22][24][12] a misconception which has incited centuries of violent religious persecution of the Yazidis as "devil-worshippers".[5][13][22][25][26] Persecution of Yazidis has continued in their home communities within the borders of modern Iraq.[5][13][27]

Yazidis, however, believe Tawûsî Melek is not a source of evil or wickedness.[5][13][22] They consider him to be the leader of the archangels, not a fallen angel.[5][22][28][12]

The Yazidis of Kurdistan have been called many things, most notoriously 'devil-worshippers', a term used both by unsympathetic neighbours and fascinated Westerners. This sensational epithet is not only deeply offensive to the Yazidis themselves, but quite simply wrong.[29] Non-Yazidis have associated Melek Taûs with

Shaitan (Islamic/Arab name) or Satan, but Yazidis find that offensive and do not actually mention that name.[29]

Holy figures

Main article: List of Yazidi holy figures

Yezidis believe in Seven Angels, considered the emanations of God, who, In Yazidi creation stories, were created by God from his own light (nûr) before the creation of this world. God assigned all of the world's affairs to these seven Angels and Tawûsê Melek was appointed as the leader. The angels are also referred to as Heft Sirr ("the Seven Mysteries"). In this context, they have, so to speak, a part of God in themselves. Another word that is used for this is sur or sirr (literally: 'mystery'), which denotes a divine essence from which the angels were created.[30] This pure divine essence called Sur or Sirr has its own personality and will and is also called Sura Xudê ('the Sur of God').[31] This term refers to the essence of the Divine itself, that is, God. The Angels share this essence from their creator who is God.[30] In religious literature, these Angels are sometimes referred to as Cibrayîl, Ezrayîl, Mîkayîl, Şifqayîl, Derdayîl, Ezafîl, and Ezazîl.[32] The leader of these Angels is known as Tawûsê Melek, and the others are better known by the names of their earthly incarnations/representations: Fexreddin, Sheikh Shems, Nasirdin, Sejadin, Sheikh Obekr, and Shex Hesen (Şêxsin).[33][2][12]

The Yazidi pantheon contains a total of 365 holy figures venerated by Yazidis,[34] designated by various special terms including Xudan, Xas, Mêr and Babçak. According to Yazidi beliefs, God is almighty and absolute, and the Xudans are a part of His power, moreover, in relation to nature, Yazidis believe in Xudans for most of natural elements and phenomena and they are regarded as divine powers that have control over these phenomena. In Yazidi mythology, the Xudans appeared after the creation of the world for the four elements of nature and their manifestations.[35]

Sheikh 'Adī

Main article: Sheikh Adi ibn Musafir

Entrance to the Yazidi Temple in Lalish

One of the important figures of Yazidism is Sheikh 'Adī ibn Musafir. Sheikh 'Adī ibn Musafir settled in the valley of Laliş (some 58 kilometres (36 mi) northeast of Mosul) in the Yazidi mountains in the early 12th century and founded the 'Adawiyya Sufi order. He died in 1162, and his tomb at Laliş is a focal point of Yazidi pilgrimage and the principal Yazidi holy site.[36] Yazidism has many influences: Sufi influence and imagery (especially taken from Mansur al-Hallaj)[37] can be seen in the religious vocabulary, especially in the terminology of the Yazidis' esoteric literature, but most of the theology, rituals, traditions, and festivals remains non-Islamic. Its cosmogony for instance has many points in common with those of ancient Iranian religions.[38][39][40][41][2]

Rebirth and concept of time

Yazidis believe in the rebirth of the soul. Like the Ahl-e Haqq, the Yazidis use the metaphor of a change of garment to describe the process, which plays an exceptional role in Yazidi religiosity and is called the "change of [one's] shirt" (kirasgorîn). There is also a belief that some of the events from the time of creation repeat themselves in cycles of history. In Yazidism, different concepts of time coexist:[8]

An esoteric time sphere (Kurdish: enzel), This term denotes a state of being before the creation of the world. According to Yazidi cosmogony, there is God and a pearl in this stage.
Bedîl or dewr (a cyclic course of time): it means literally 'change, changing' or 'turning, revolution' and in the Yazidi context denotes a new period of time in the history of the world. Therefore, it may also mean 'renewing' or 'renewed' and designates the start of a renewed period of time.
A linear course, which runs from the start of the creation by God to the collective eschatological end point.
Three tofan ('storm, flood') i.e. catastrophes. It is believed that there are three big events during history named tofan that play a purificatory role, changing the quality of life in a positive manner. Each catastrophe, which ultimately brings renewal to the world, takes place through a basic element: the first through water (tofanê avê), the second through fire (tofanê agirî) and the last is connected with wind (air) (tofanê ba). It is believed that the first tofan has already occurred in the past and that the next tofan will occur through fire. According to this perception, the three sacred elements, namely water, fire and air, purify the fourth one, the earth. These events however are not be considered as eschatological events. They occur during the life of people. Although the purificatory events cause many deaths, ultimately life continues.[42]
In Yazidism, the older original concept of metempsychosis and the cyclic perception of the course of time is harmonised and coexists with the younger idea of a collective eschatology.[8]

Cosmogony and beginning of life
The Yazidi cosmogony is recorded in several sacred texts and traditions. It can therefore only be inferred and understood through an overall view of the sacred texts and traditions. The cosmogony can be divided into three stages:

Enzel – the state before the pearl burst (dur).
Developments immediately after the burst – cosmogony II
The creation of the earth and man – anthropogony[43][44]
The term Enzel is one of the frequently mentioned terms in the religious vocabulary and it comes up numerous times in the religious hymns, known as Qewls. For instance, in Qewlê Tawisî Melek:

"Ya Rebî ji Enzel de her tuyî qedîmî" (English: Oh, Creator of the Enzel, you are infinite)[45]

And Dûa Razanê:

Ezdayî me, ji direke enzelî me (English: I am a follower of God, I come from an "enzelî" pearl)[45]

Thus, the term Enzel can also be referred to as a "pure, spiritual, immaterial and infinite world", "the Beyond" or "the sphere beyond the profane world". The Enzel stage describes a spaceless and timeless state and therefore illustrates a supernatural state. In this stage, initially there is only a God, who creates a pearl out of his own light, in which his shining throne (textê nûrî) is located.

Qewlê Bê Elif:

Padşê min bi xo efirandî dura beyzaye – My King created the white pearl from himself

Textê nûrî sedef – The shining throne in the pearl[45]

The Yazidi qewls mention the universe as having originated from a white pearl that existed in pre-eternity. At the beginning of the time prior to the creation, God emerged from the cosmic pearl, which rested on the horns of a bull that stood on the back of a fish. After God and the pearl separated, the universe burst out of the pearl and became visible as waves rippled across from pearl to form the primeval Cosmic Ocean.[19] As the pearl burst open, the beginning of the material universe was set in motion. Mihbet (meaning 'love') came into being and was laid as the original foundation, colours began to form, and red, yellow and white began to shine from the burst pearl.

The Yazidi religion has its own perception of the colours, which is seen in the mythology and shown through clothing taboos, in religious ceremonies, customs and rituals. Colours are perceived as the symbolizations of nature and the beginning of life, thus the emphasis of colours can be found in the creation myth. The colors white, red, green and yellow in particular are frequently emphasised. White is considered the color of purity and peace and is the main colour of the religious clothing of the Yazidis.[46][2][44]

Yazidi accounts of the creation differ significantly from those of the Abrahamic religions (Judaism, Christianity, and Islam), since they are derived from the Ancient Mesopotamian and Indo-Iranian traditions; therefore, Yazidi cosmogony is closer to those of Ancient Iranian religions, Yarsanism, and Zoroastrianism.[47][41]

Yazidi sacred texts

Further information: Yazidi literature

The religious literature of Yazidis is composed mostly of poetry which is orally transmitted in mainly Kurmanji and includes numerous genres, such as Qewl (religious hymn), Beyt (poem), Duʿa (prayer), Dirozge (another kind of prayer), Şehdetiya Dîn (the Declaration of the Faith), Terqîn (prayer for after a sacrifice), Pişt perde (literally 'under the veil', another genre), Qesîde (Qasida), Semaʿ (literally 'listening'), Lavij, Xerîbo, Xizêmok, Payîzok, and Robarîn.[48] The poetic literature is composed in an advanced and archaic language where more complex terms are used, which may be difficult to understand for those who are not trained in religious knowledge.[49] Therefore, they are accompanied by some prosaic genres of the Yazidi literature that often interpret the contents of the poems and provide explanations of their contexts in the spoken language comprehensible among the common population. The prosaic genres include Çîrok and Çîvanok (legends and myths), and Dastan and Menal Pîrs (interpretations of religious hymns).[48][1] Yazidis also possess some written texts, such as the sacred manuscripts called mişûrs and individual collections of religious texts called cilvê and Keşkûl, although they are rarer and often safekept among Yazidis.[50] Yazidis are also said to have two holy books, Book of Revelation and Black Book whose authenticities are debated among scholars.[1]

The Yazidi holy books are claimed to be the Book of Revelation and Black Book. Scholars generally agree that the manuscripts of both books published in 1911 and 1913 were forgeries written by non-Yazidis in response to Western travellers' and scholars' interest in the Yazidi religion; however, the material in them is consistent with authentic Yazidi traditions.[1] True texts of those names may have existed, but remain obscure. The real core texts of the religion that exist today are the hymns known as qawls; they have also been orally transmitted during most of their history, but are now being collected with the assent of the community, effectively transforming Yazidism into a scriptural religion.[51][1] The sacred texts had already been translated into English by the early 20th century.[52]

Qewl and Beyt

A very important genre of oral literature of the Yazidi community consists of religious hymns, called Qewls, which literally means 'word, speech' (from Arabic qawl).[53] The performers of these hymns, called the Qewal, constitute a distinct class within the Yazidi society. They are a veritable source of ancient Yazidi lore and are traditionally recruited from the non-religious members of other Kurdish tribes, principally the Dumilî and Hekarî.[54][13][8] The qewls are full of cryptic allusions and usually need to be accompanied by čirōks ('stories') that explain their context.[55][1]

Mishur

Mishurs are a type of sacred manuscripts that were written down in the 13th century and handed down to each lineage (ocax) of the Pirs; each of the manuscripts contain descriptions of the founder of the Pir lineage that they were distributed to, along with a list of Kurdish tribes and other priestly lineages that were affiliated with the founder.[56] The mishurs are safekept among the families of Pirs in particular places that are designated for their safekeeping; these places are referred to as stêr in Kurmanji.[57] According to the Yazidi tradition, there are a total of 40 mishurs which were distributed to the 40 lineages of Pirs.[8]

Festivals

Yazidi New Year

Main article: Yazidi New Year

The Yazidi New Year (Sersal) is called Çarşema sor ("Red Wednesday")[21] or Çarşema Serê Nîsanê ("Wednesday at the beginning of April").[58] It falls in spring, on the first Wednesday[59] of the April and Nîsan months in the Julian and Seleucid calendars, i.e. the first Wednesday on or after 14 April according to the Gregorian calendar.[60]

Feast of Êzî

Main article: Feast of Ezid

Yazidis celebrating a Yazidi ceremony called Tawwaf in the town of Bashiqa in Iraq.

One of the most important Yazidi festivals is Îda Êzî ("Feast of Êzî"), which is celebrated in commemoration of the divine figure Sultan Ezid. Which every year takes place on the first Friday on or after 14 December. Before this festival, the Yazidis fast for three days, where nothing is eaten from sunrise to sunset. The Îda Êzî festival is celebrated in honor of God and the three days of fasting before are also associated with the ever shorter days before the winter solstice, when the Sun is less and less visible. With the Îda Êzî festival, the fasting time is ended. The festival is often celebrated with music, food, drinks and dance.[61]

Tawûsgeran

Main article: Tawûsgeran

Another important festival is the Tawûsgeran, where Qewals and other religious dignitaries visit Yazidi villages, bringing the sinjaq, sacred images of a peacock symbolizing Tawûsê Melek. These are venerated, fees are collected from the pious, sermons are preached and holy water and berat (small stones from Lalish) distributed.[62][63]

Feast of the Assembly

Main article: Feast of the Assembly

The greatest festival of the year is the Cêjna Cemaiya ('Feast of the Assembly'), which includes an annual pilgrimage to the tomb of Sheikh 'Adī' (Şêx Adî) in Lalish, northern Iraq. The festival is celebrated from 6 October to 13 October,[64] in honor of the Sheikh Adi. It is an important time for cohesion.[65]

If possible, Yazidis make at least one pilgrimage to Lalish during their lifetime, and those living in the region try to attend at least once a year for the Feast of the Assembly in autumn.[12]

Tiwaf

Main article: Tiwaf

Tiwafs are yearly feasts of shrines and their holy beings which constitute an important part of Yazidi religious and communal life. Every village that contains a shrine holds annual tiwafs in the name of the holy being to which the shrine is dedicated.[34][66]

Religious practices

Prayers

Prayers occupy a special status in Yazidi literature. They contain important symbols and religious knowledge connected with the Holy Men, God, and daily situations. The prayers are mostly private and as a rule they are not performed in public. Yazidis pray towards the sun,[67] usually privately, or the prayers are recited by one person during a gathering. The prayers are classified according to their own content. There are:

- Prayers dedicated to God and holy beings
- Prayers of Yazidi castes
- Prayers for specific occasions
- Rite of passage prayers
- Prayers against health problems and illnesses
- Daily prayers
- Prayers connected with the nature, i.e. the Moon, stars, Sun, etc.[68]

Customs

Baptism of a Yazidi child in Lalish

Children are baptised at birth and circumcision is not required, but is practised by some due to regional customs.[69] The Yazidi baptism is called mor kirin (literally: 'to seal'). Traditionally, Yazidi children are baptised at birth with water from the Kaniya Sipî ('White Spring') at Lalish. It involves pouring holy water from the spring on the child's head three times.[70][71]

Purity and taboos

The Chel Mera Temple, or "40 Men Temple", on the highest peak of the Sinjar Mountains in northern Iraq. The temple is so old that no one remembers how it came to have that name, but it is believed to derive from the burial of forty men on the mountaintop site.[72]

Many Yazidis consider pork to be prohibited. However, many Yazidis living in Germany began to view this taboo as a foreign belief from Judaism or Islam and not part of Yazidism, and therefore abandoned this rule.[73] Furthermore, in a BBC interview in April 2010, Baba Sheikh, the spiritual leader of all Yazidis, stated that ordinary Yazidis may eat what they want, but the religious clergy refrain from certain vegetables (including cabbage) because "they cause gases".[74]

Some Yazidis in Armenia and Georgia who converted to Christianity, still identify as Yazidis even after converting,[75] but are not accepted by the other Yazidis as Yazidis.

Religious organisation

Main article: Yazidi social organization

The Yazidis are strictly endogamous;[12][77] members of the three Yazidi castes, the murids, sheikhs, and pirs, marry only within their group.[12]

There are several religious duties that are performed by several dignitaries, such as the Mir Hejj (Prince of the Pilgrimage), Sheikh el-Wazir (who oversees the sanctuary of Sheikh Shems at Lalish), Pire Esbiya (treasurer of the sanctuary of Sheikh Shems at Lalish), Mijewir (local shrine custodian), Baba Chawush (guardian of the sanctuary of Sheikh Adi), and others.[19]

"The Yazidis’ cultural practices are observably Kurdish, and almost all speak Kurmanji (Northern Kurdish), with the exception of the villages of Baʿšiqa and Baḥzānēin northern Iraq, where Arabic is spoken. Kurmanji is the language of almost all the orally transmitted religious traditions of the Yazidis."

Zoroastrianism

AI Overview
Zoroastrianism And Persian Mythology: The Foundation Of ...
Zoroastrianism is an ancient Persian monotheistic religion founded by the prophet Zarathushtra (Zoroaster), centered on the worship of one God, Ahura Mazda, emphasizing a cosmic struggle between good (Spenta Mainyu) and evil (Angra Mainyu), with humans choosing sides through "Good Thoughts, Good Words, Good Deeds," and culminating in a final judgment and restoration of the world. Its sacred text is the Avesta, and fire is a revered symbol of God's light and purity, not worshipped itself, with adherents known as Parsis in India and Iranians in Iran.
Key Beliefs & Practices
One God: Ahura Mazda, the Wise Lord, is the uncreated, all-good Creator.
Cosmic Dualism: A constant battle between Ahura Mazda's creative, orderly force and Angra Mainyu's destructive, chaotic force.
Ethical Living: Following the maxim "Good Thoughts, Good Words, Good Deeds" to help defeat evil and bring about paradise on Earth.
Sacred Texts: The Avesta, especially the Gathas (hymns by Zoroaster).
Worship: Communal worship in fire temples (Dar-e-Mehr), where a sacred fire burns as a symbol of divine energy.
Symbolism: Fire (purity, light), white (purity), the Kusti (sacred girdle).
History & Influence
Origins: Founded by Zarathushtra in ancient Persia (Iran), potentially over 3,000 years ago.
State Religion: Became the state religion of powerful Persian empires.
Decline: Declined significantly after the Muslim conquest of Persia in the 7th century CE.
Modern Communities: Descendants (Parsis) fled to India, forming vibrant communities alongside smaller groups in Iran and worldwide.
Influence: Significantly influenced Judaism, Christianity, and Islam, particularly concepts of a final judgment and resurrection.

Before the advent of Islam, Zoroastrian thought influenced the architecture of Iran and the surrounding regions for thousands of years. After the Sassanian empire was invaded by the Arabs, Zoroastrian temples similar to the one in this video were converted to mosques. Eventually, new mosques would use the parti of the Zoroastrian temple in their design. Since then, Zoroastrianism has been suppressed by the ruling dynasties of the region. Miraculously, it has managed to stay alive to this day and thanks to religious freedoms in countries such as the United States, it is beginning to flourish around the world once again. This 3D model was manually modeled and rendered by @kaveh_history without the use of Ai. It is the fire temple built by Ardashir 1 in Piruzabad, Iran. Ardashir was the founder of the ancient Sassanian empire which thrived for over 4 centuries. Contrary to the popular belief, Zoroastrianism is not a monotheistic religion but an henotheistic one: Zoroastrians believe in a wide rage of minor deities with one supreme god (Ahura Mazda).

Is Zoroastrianism a problem for the divine origin of Judaism and Christianity?
Popular comment · I believe that Zoroaster had some hint at the true God but it wasn't time yet. Zorastrianism isn't as close to Judaism as some sceptics like to claim. It's dualism raises doubts about the genuine monotheism of the religion. However, I do think that Zoroaster recognized the problem of paganism and clearly knew that there was truth beyond Persian paganism.

Zoroastrianism,[a] also called Mazdayasna[b] or Behdin,[c] is an Iranian religion centred on the Avesta and the teachings of Zarathushtra Spitama, who is more commonly referred to by the Greek translation, Zoroaster (Greek: Ζωροάστρις Zōroastris). Among the world's oldest organized faiths, its adherents exalt an uncreated, benevolent, and all-wise deity known as Ahura Mazda (𐬀𐬵𐬎𐬭𐬀⸱𐬨𐬀𐬰𐬛𐬁), who is hailed as the supreme being of the universe. Opposed to Ahura Mazda is Angra Mainyu (𐬀𐬢𐬭𐬀⸱𐬨𐬀𐬌𐬥𐬌𐬌𐬎), who is personified as a destructive spirit and the adversary of all things that are good. As such, the Zoroastrian religion combines a dualistic cosmology of good and evil with an eschatological outlook predicting the ultimate triumph of Ahura Mazda over evil.[1] Opinions vary among scholars as to whether Zoroastrianism is monotheistic,[1] polytheistic,[2] henotheistic,[3] or a combination of all three.[4] Zoroastrianism shaped Iranian culture and history, while scholars differ on whether it significantly influenced ancient Western philosophy and the Abrahamic religions,[5][6] or gradually reconciled with other religions and traditions, such as Christianity and Islam.[7]

Originating from Zoroaster's reforms of the ancient Iranian religion, Zoroastrianism began during the Avestan period (possibly as early as the 2nd millennium BCE), but was first recorded in the mid-6th century BCE. For the following millennium, it was the official religion of successive Iranian polities, beginning with the Achaemenid Empire, which formalized and institutionalized many of its tenets and rituals, and ending with the Sasanian Empire, which revitalized the faith and standardized its teachings.[8] In the 7th century CE, the rise of Islam and the ensuing Muslim conquest of Iran marked the beginning of the decline of Zoroastrianism. The persecution of Zoroastrians by the early Muslims in the nascent Rashidun Caliphate prompted much of the community to migrate to the Indian subcontinent, where they were granted asylum and became the progenitors of today's Parsis. Once numbering in the millions, the world's total Zoroastrian population is estimated to comprise between 110,000 and 120,000 people, with most of them residing either in India (50,000–60,000), in Iran (15,000–25,000), or in North America (22,000). The religion is thought to be declining due to restrictions on conversion, strict endogamy, and low birth rates.

The central beliefs and practices of Zoroastrianism are contained in the Avesta, a compendium of sacred texts assembled over several centuries. Its oldest and most central component are the Gathas, purported to be the direct teachings of Zoroaster and his account of conversations with Ahura Mazda. These writings are part of a major section of the Avesta called the Yasna, which forms the core of Zoroastrian liturgy. Zoroaster's religious philosophy divided the early Iranian gods of Proto-Indo-Iranian paganism into emanations of the natural world—the ahura and the daeva; the former class consisting of divinities to be revered and the latter class consisting of divinities to be rejected and condemned. Zoroaster proclaimed that Ahura Mazda was the supreme creator and sustaining force of the universe, working in gētīg (the visible material realm) and mēnōg (the invisible spiritual and mental realm) through the Amesha Spenta, a class of seven divine entities that represent various aspects of the universe and the highest moral good. Emanating from Ahura Mazda is Spenta Mainyu (the Holy or Bountiful Spirit), the source of life and goodness,[9] which is opposed by Angra Mainyu (the Destructive or Opposing Spirit), who is born from Aka Manah (evil thought). Angra Mainyu was further developed by Middle Persian literature into Ahriman (𐭠𐭧𐭫𐭬𐭭), Ahura Mazda's direct adversary.

Zoroastrian doctrine holds that, within this cosmic dichotomy, human beings have the choice between Asha (truth, cosmic order), the principle of righteousness or "rightness" that is promoted and embodied by Ahura Mazda, and Druj (falsehood, deceit), the essential nature of Angra Mainyu that expresses itself as greed, wrath, and envy.[10] Thus, the central moral precepts of the religion are good thoughts (hwnata), good words (hakhta), and good deeds (hvarshta), which are recited in many prayers and ceremonies.[5][11][12] Many of the practices and beliefs of ancient Iranian religion can still be seen in Zoroastrianism, such as reverence for nature and its elements, such as water (aban). Fire (atar) is held by Zoroastrians to be particularly sacred as a symbol of Ahura Mazda himself, serving as a focal point of many ceremonies and rituals, and serving as the basis for Zoroastrian places of worship, which are known as fire temples.

Etymology

The name Zoroaster (Ζωροάστηρ) is a Greek rendering of the Avestan name

Zarathustra. He is known as Zartosht and Zardosht in Persian and Zaratosht in Gujarati.[13] The Zoroastrian name of the religion is Mazdayasna, which combines Mazda- with the Avestan word yasna, meaning "worship, devotion".[14] In English, an adherent of the faith is commonly called a Zoroastrian or a Zarathustrian. An older expression still used today is Behdin, meaning "of the good religion", deriving from beh < Middle Persian weh 'good' + din < Middle Persian dēn < Avestan daēnā".[15] In the Zoroastrian liturgy, this term is used as a title for a lay individual who has been formally inducted into the religion in a Navjote ceremony, in contrast to the priestly titles of osta, osti, ervad (hirbod), mobed and dastur.[16]

The first surviving reference to Zoroaster in English scholarship is attributed to Thomas Browne (1605–1682), who briefly refers to Zoroaster in his 1643 Religio Medici.[17] The term Mazdaism (/ˈmæzdə.ɪzəm/) is an alternative form in English used as well for the faith, taking Mazda- from the name Ahura Mazda and adding the suffix -ism to suggest a belief system.[18]

Theology

See also: Criticism of Zoroastrianism and Religious influences on Zoroastrianism
The theological category of Zoroastrianism is hard to define. The reasons are the difficulties in assigning precise dates to the principal texts and the fact that many contain much older material. Furthermore, Zoroastrianism shaped only slowly over time and was not complete even by the time of the Muslim conquest of Persia. Polytheistic, monotheistic, and dualistic strands can be identified in the wider Zoroastrian tradition, with dualism being the dominant tendency. The major difference to Manichaeism lies in the insistence of good in the creation account.[19]

Some scholars believe Zoroastrianism started as an Indo-Iranian polytheistic religion: according to Yujin Nagasawa, "like the rest of the Zoroastrian texts, the Old Avesta does not teach monotheism".[20] By contrast, Md. Sayem characterizes Zoroastrianism as being one of the oldest monotheistic religions in the world.[21]

Zoroastrians treat Ahura Mazda as the supreme god, but believe in lesser divinities known as yazatas ("beings worthy of worship"), who share some similarities with the angels in Abrahamic religions.[22] These yazatas include Anahita, Sraosha, Mithra, Rashnu, and Tishtrya. Historian Richard Foltz has put forth evidence that Iranians of the pre-Islamic era worshipped all these figures; especially the gods Mithra and Anahita.[23]

Prods Oktor Skjærvø states Zoroastrianism is henotheistic, and "a dualistic and polytheistic religion, but with one supreme god, who is the father of the ordered cosmos".[3] Brian Arthur Brown states that this is unclear, because historic texts present a conflicting picture, ranging from Zoroastrianism's belief in "one god, two gods, or a best god henotheism".[24] Economist Mario Ferrero suggests that Zoroastrianism transitioned from polytheism to monotheism due to political and economic pressures.[25]

In the 19th century, through contact with Western academics and missionaries, Zoroastrianism experienced a massive theological change that still affects it today. The Rev. John Wilson led various missionary campaigns in India against the Parsi community, disparaging the Parsis for their "dualism" and "polytheism" and as having unnecessary rituals while declaring the Avesta to not be "divinely inspired". This caused mass dismay in the relatively uneducated Parsi community, which blamed its priests and led to some conversions towards Christianity.[citation needed]

The arrival of the German orientalist and philologist Martin Haug led to a rallied defense of the faith through Haug's reinterpretation of the Avesta through Christianized and European orientalist lens. Haug postulated that Zoroastrianism was solely monotheistic with all other divinities reduced to the status of angels while Ahura Mazda became both omnipotent and the source of evil as well as good. Haug's thinking was subsequently disseminated as a Parsi interpretation, thus corroborating Haug's theory, and the idea became so popular that it is now almost universally accepted as doctrine (though being re-evaluated in modern Zoroastrianism and academia).[26] It has been argued by Almut Hintze that this designation of monotheism is not wholly perfect and that Zoroastrianism instead has its "own form of monotheism" which combines elements of dualism and polytheism.[27] Farhang Mehr asserts that Zoroastrianism is principally monotheistic with some dualistic elements.[28]

Lenorant and Chevallier assert that Zoroastrianism's concept of divinity covers both being and mind as immanent entities, describing Zoroastrianism as having a belief in an immanent self-creating universe with consciousness as its special attribute, thereby putting Zoroastrianism in the pantheistic fold sharing its origin with Indian Hinduism.[29][30]

Nature of the divine

Zoroastrianism contains multiple classes of divine beings, who are typically organised into tiers and spheres of influence.[citation needed]

Ahuras

Main article: Ahura

The Ahura are a class of divine beings "inherited by Zoroastrianism from the prehistoric Indo-Iranian religion. In the Rig Veda, asura denotes the "older gods", such as the "Father Asura", Varuna, and Mitra, who originally ruled over the primeval undifferentiated Chaos."[31]

Ahura Mazda

Main article: Ahuramazda

Ahura Mazda, also known as Oromasdes, Ohrmazd, Ormazd, Ormusd, Hoormazd, Harzoo, Hormazd, Hormaz and Hurmz, is the creator deity and the supreme god in Zoroastrianism. Ahura Mazda stands for the dual deity Mitrā́-Váruṇā of the Hindu holy book known as the Rigveda.[31]

According to scholars, Ahura Mazda is an uncreated, omniscient, omnipotent and benevolent God who has created the spiritual and material existences out of infinite light, and maintains the cosmic law of Asha. He is the first and most invoked spirit in Yasna, and is unrivaled, has no equals and presides over all creation.[32] In Avesta, Ahura Mazda is the only true God, and the representation of goodness, light, and truth. He is in conflict with the evil spirit Angra Mainyu, the representation of evil, darkness, and deceit. Angru Mainyu's goal is to tempt humans away from Ahura Mazda. Notably, Angra Mainyu is not a creation of Ahura Mazda but an independent entity.[33] The belief in Ahura Mazda, the "Lord of Wisdom" who is considered an all-encompassing Deity and the only existing one, is the foundation of Zoroastrianism.[34]

Ahura Mithra
Main article: Mithraism
Mitra, also called Mithra, was originally an Indo-Iranian god of "covenant, agreement, treaty, alliance, promise." Mitra is considered a being worthy of worship and is "characterized by riches".[35]

Yazata
Main article: Yazatas
The Yazata (Avestan: 𐬫𐬀𐬰𐬀𐬙𐬀) are divine beings worshiped by song and sacrifice in Zoroastrianism, in accordance with the Avesta. The word 'Yazata' is derived from 'Yazdan', the Old Persian word for 'god',[36] and literally means "divinity worthy of worship or veneration". As a concept, it also contains a wide range of other meanings; though generally signifying (or used as an epithet of) a divinity.[37][38]

The origins of Yazata are varied, with many also being featured as gods in Hinduism, or other Iranian religions. In modern Zoroastrianism, the Yazata are considered holy emanations of the creator, always devoted to him and obey the will of Ahura Mazda. While subject to repression by the Islamic Caliphate, the Yazata were often framed as "angels" to counter accusation of polytheism (shirk).[39] According to the Avesta The Yazata assist Ahura Mazda in his battle against the evil spirit, and are hypostases of moral or physical aspects of creation. The yazatas collectively are "the good powers under Ahura Mazda", who is "the greatest of the yazatas".[36]

Notable Yazatas
Ahura Mazda
Mitra or Mithra
Anahita – formerly an Iranian water goddess
Ātar (Fire)
Rashnu, one of the three judges who pass judgment on the souls of people after death
Sraosha or Srōsh
Verethragna – who may be the Vedic god Indra
Amesha Spentas
Yazatas are further divided into Amesha Spentas, their "ham-kar" or "Collaborators" who are Lower Ranking divinities,[40] and also certain healing plants, primordial creatures, the fravashis of the dead, and certain prayers that are themselves considered holy.

The Amesha Spentas and their "ham-kar" or "collaborator" Yazatas are as follows:

Vohu Manah + Mah / Geush Urvan / Ram
Asha Vahishta + Atar / Sraosha / Verethraghna
Kshatra Vairya + Khwar / Mithra / Asman / Anaghran
Spenta Armaiti + Ap / Daena / Ashi / Manthra Spenta
Haurvatat + Tishtriya / Fravashi / Vata
Ameretat + Rashnu / Arshtat / Zamyad[40]
Principal beliefs
Tenets of faith

Faravahar, one of the primary symbols of Zoroastrianism, believed to be the depiction of a Fravashi or the Khvarenah.
In Zoroastrianism, Ahura Mazda is the beginning and the end, the creator of everything that can and cannot be seen, the eternal and uncreated, the all-good and source of Asha.[14] In the Gathas, the most sacred texts of Zoroastrianism thought to have been composed by Zoroaster himself, Zoroaster acknowledged the highest devotion to Ahura Mazda, with worship and adoration also given to Ahura Mazda's manifestations (Amesha Spenta) and the other ahuras (Yazata) that support Ahura Mazda.[41]

Daena (din in modern Persian and meaning "that which is seen") is representative of the sum of one's spiritual conscience and attributes, which through one's choice Asha is either strengthened or weakened in the Daena.[42] Traditionally, the manthras (similar to the Hindu sacred utterance mantra) prayer formulas, are believed to be of immense power and the vehicles of Asha and creation used to maintain good and fight evil.[43] Daena should not be confused with the fundamental principle of Asha, believed to be the cosmic order which governs and permeates all existence, and the concept of which governed the life of the ancient Indo-Iranians. For these, asha was the course of everything observable—the motion of the planets and astral bodies; the progression of the seasons; and the pattern of daily nomadic herdsman life, governed by regular metronomic events such as sunrise and sunset, and was strengthened through truth-telling and following the Threefold Path.[44]

All physical creation (getig) was thus determined to run according to a master plan—inherent to Ahura Mazda—and violations of the order (druj) were violations against creation, and thus violations against Ahura Mazda.[45] This concept of asha versus the druj should not be confused with Western and especially Christian notions of good versus evil, for although both forms of opposition express moral conflict, the asha versus druj concept is more systemic and less personal, representing, for instance, chaos (that opposes order); or "uncreation", evident as natural decay (that opposes creation); or more simply "the lie" (that opposes truth and goodness).[44] Moreover, in the role as the one uncreated creator of all, Ahura Mazda is not the creator of druj, which is "nothing", anti-creation, and thus (likewise) uncreated and developed as the antithesis of existence through choice.[46]

A Parsi Wedding, 1905

In this schema of asha versus druj, mortal beings (both humans and animals) play a critical role, for they too are created. Here, in their lives, they are active participants in the conflict, and it is their spiritual duty to defend Asha, which is under constant assault and would decay in strength without counteraction.[44] Throughout the Gathas, Zoroaster emphasizes deeds and actions within society and accordingly extreme asceticism is frowned upon in Zoroastrianism but moderate forms are allowed within.[47]

Humata, Huxta, Huvarshta (Good Thoughts, Good Words, Good Deeds), the Threefold Path of Asha, is considered the core maxim of Zoroastrianism especially by modern practitioners. In Zoroastrianism, good transpires for those who do righteous deeds for its own sake, not for the search of reward. Those who do evil are said to be attacked and confused by the druj and are responsible for aligning themselves back to Asha by following this path.[48] There is also a heavy emphasis on spreading happiness, mostly through charity,[49] and respecting the spiritual equality and duty of both men and women.[50]

Central to Zoroastrianism is the emphasis on moral choice, to choose the responsibility and duty for which one is in the mortal world, or to give up this duty and so facilitate the work of druj. Similarly, predestination is rejected in Zoroastrian teaching and the absolute free will of all conscious beings is core, with even divine beings having the ability to choose. Humans bear responsibility for all situations they are in, and in the way they act toward one another. Reward, punishment, happiness, and grief all depend on how individuals live their lives.[51]

In Zoroastrian tradition, life is a temporary state in which a mortal is expected to participate actively in the continuing battle between Asha and Druj. Prior to its incarnation at the birth of the child, the urvan (soul) of an individual is still united with its fravashi (personal/higher spirit), which has existed since Ahura Mazda created the universe. Prior to the splitting off of the urvan, the fravashi participates in the maintenance of creation led by Ahura Mazda. During the life of a given individual, the fravashi acts as a source of inspiration to perform good actions and as a spiritual protector. The fravashis of ancestors cultural, spiritual, and heroic, associated with illustrious bloodlines, are venerated and can be called upon to aid the living.[52]

The religion states that active and ethical participation in life through good deeds formed from good thoughts and good words is necessary to ensure happiness and to keep chaos at bay. This active participation is a central element in Zoroaster's concept of free will, and Zoroastrianism as such rejects extreme forms of asceticism and monasticism but historically has allowed for moderate expressions of these concepts.[47] On the fourth day after death, the urvan is reunited with its fravashi, whereupon the experiences of life in the material world are collected for use in the continuing battle for good in the spiritual world. For the most part, Zoroastrianism does not have a notion of reincarnation; albeit Followers of Ilm-e-Kshnoom in India, among other currently non-traditional opinions, believe in reincarnation and practice vegetarianism.[53]

Zoroastrianism's emphasis on the protection and veneration of nature and its elements has led some to proclaim it as the "world's first proponent of ecology."[54] The Avesta and other texts call for the protection of water, earth, fire, and air making it, in effect, an ecological religion: "It is not surprising that Mazdaism... is called the first ecological religion. The reverence for Yazatas (divine spirits) emphasizes the preservation of nature" (Avesta: Yasnas 1.19, 3.4, 16.9; Yashts 6.3–4, 10.13).[55] However, this particular assertion is limited to natural forces held as emanations of asha by the fact that early Zoroastrians had a duty to exterminate "evil" species, a dictate no longer followed in modern Zoroastrianism.[56] Although there have been various theological statements supporting vegetarianism in Zoroastrianism's history and those who believe that Zoroaster was vegetarian.[57]

Zoroastrianism is not entirely uniform in theological and philosophical thought, especially with historical and modern influences having a significant impact on individual and local beliefs, practices, values, and vocabulary, sometimes merging with tradition and in other cases displacing it.[58] The ultimate purpose in the life of a practicing Zoroastrian is to become an ashavan (a master of Asha) and to bring happiness into the world, which contributes to the cosmic battle against evil. The core teachings of Zoroastrianism include:

Following the threefold path of Asha: Humata, Hūxta, Huvarshta (lit. 'good thoughts, good words, good deeds').[48]
Practicing charity to keep one's soul aligned with Asha and thus with spreading happiness.[49]
The spiritual equality and duty of men and women alike.[50]
Being good for the sake of goodness and without the hope of reward (see Ashem Vohu).

Cosmogony
According to the Zoroastrian creation myth, there is one universal, transcendent, all-good, and uncreated supreme creator deity Ahura Mazda,[14] or the "Wise Lord" (Ahura meaning "Lord" and Mazda meaning "Wisdom" in Avestan).[14][59] Zoroaster keeps the two attributes separate as two different concepts in most of the Gathas yet sometimes combines them into one form. Zoroaster also proclaims that Ahura Mazda is omniscient but not omnipotent.[14] Ahura Mazda existed in light and goodness above, while Angra Mainyu, (also referred to in later texts as "Ahriman"),[60][61] the destructive spirit/mentality, existed in darkness and ignorance below. They have existed independently of each other for all time, and manifest contrary substances. In the Gathas, Ahura Mazda is noted as working through emanations known as the Amesha Spenta[62] and with the help of "other ahuras".[26] These divine beings called Amesha

Spentas, support him and are representative and guardians of different aspects of creation and the ideal personality.[62] Ahura Mazda is immanent in humankind and interacts with creation through these bounteous/holy divinities. In addition to these, He is assisted by a league of countless divinities called Yazatas, meaning "worthy of worship." Each Yazata is generally a hypostasis of a moral or physical aspect of creation. Asha[14][44] is the main spiritual force which comes from Ahura Mazda.[44] It is the cosmic order and is the antithesis of chaos, which is evident as druj, falsehood and disorder, that comes from Angra Mainyu.[46][32] The resulting cosmic conflict involves all of creation, mental/spiritual and material, including humanity at its core, which has an active role to play in the conflict.[63] The main representative of Asha in this conflict is Spenta Mainyu, the creative spirit/mentality.[60] Ahura Mazda then created the material and visible world itself in order to ensnare evil. He created the floating, egg-shaped universe in two parts: first the spiritual (menog) and 3,000 years later, the physical (getig).[45] Ahura Mazda then created Gayomard, the archetypical perfect man, and Gavaevodata, the primordial bovine.[51]

While Ahura Mazda created the universe and humankind, Angra Mainyu, whose very nature is to destroy, miscreated demons, evil daevas, and noxious creatures (khrafstar) such as snakes, ants, and flies. Angra Mainyu created an opposite, evil being for each good being, except for humans, which he found he could not match. Angra Mainyu invaded the universe through the base of the sky, inflicting Gayomard and the bull with suffering and death. However, the evil forces were trapped in the universe and could not retreat. The dying primordial man and bovine emitted seeds, which were protected by Mah, the Moon. From the bull's seed grew all beneficial plants and animals of the world and from the man's seed grew a plant whose leaves became the first human couple. Humans thus struggle in a two-fold universe of the material and spiritual trapped and in long combat with evil. The evils of this physical world are not products of an inherent weakness but are the fault of Angra Mainyu's assault on creation. This assault turned the perfectly flat, peaceful, and daily illuminated world into a mountainous, violent place that is half night.[51] According to Zoroastrian cosmology, in articulating the Ahuna Vairya formula, Ahura Mazda made the ultimate triumph of good against Angra Mainyu evident.[64] Ahura Mazda will ultimately prevail over the evil Angra Mainyu, at which point reality will undergo a cosmic renovation called Frashokereti[65] and limited time will end. In the final renovation, all of creation—even the souls of the dead that were initially banished to or chose to descend into "darkness"—will be reunited with Ahura Mazda in the Kshatra Vairya (meaning "best dominion"),[66] being resurrected to immortality.[citation needed]

Cosmography

Zoroastrian cosmography, which refers to the description of the structure of the cosmos in Zoroastrian literature and theology, involves a primary division of the cosmos into heaven and earth.[67] The heaven is composed of three parts: the lower-most part, which is where the fixed stars may be found; the middle part, where the domain of the moon is located, and the upper part, which is the domain of the sun and unreachable by Ahirman.[68] Further above the highest level of the heaven/sky includes regions described as the Endless Lights, as well as the Thrones of Amahraspandān and Ohrmazd.[69] Although this is the basic framework which occurs in Avestan texts, later Zoroastrian literature would elaborate on this picture by further subdividing the lowest part of heaven to achieve a total of six or seven layers.[70] The Earth itself was described as possessing three primary mountains: Mount Hukairiia, whose peak was the focal point of the revolution of the star Sadwēs; Mount Haraitī, whose peak was the focal point of the revolution of the sun and the moon, and the greatest of them all, the Harā Bərəz whose peak was located at the center of the Earth and which was the first in a chain of 2,244 mountains which, together, encircled the Earth.[71] Although the planets are not described in early Zoroastrian sources, they entered Zoroastrian thought in the Middle Persian period: they were demonized and took on the names Anāhīd (Pahlavi for Venus), Tīr (Mercury), Wahrām (Mars), Ohrmazd (Jupiter), and Kēwān (Saturn).[72]

Eschatology

Main article: Frashokereti

Individual judgment at death is at the Chinvat Bridge ("bridge of judgement" or "bridge of choice"), which each human must cross, facing a spiritual judgment, though modern belief is split as to whether it is representative of a mental decision during life to choose between good and evil or an afterworld location. Humans' actions under their free will through choice determine the outcome. According to tradition, the soul is judged by the Yazatas Mithra, Sraosha, and Rashnu, where depending on the verdict one is either greeted at the bridge by a beautiful, sweet-smelling maiden or by an ugly, foul-smelling old hag representing their Daena affected by their actions in life. The maiden leads the dead safely across the bridge, which widens and becomes pleasant for the righteous, towards the House of Song. The hag leads the dead down a bridge that narrows to a razor's edge and is full of stench until the departed falls off into the abyss towards the House of Lies.[51][73] Those with a balance of good and evil go to Hamistagan, a purgatorial realm mentioned in the 9th century work Dadestan-i Denig.[74]

The House of Lies is considered temporary and reformative; punishments fit the crimes, and souls do not rest in eternal damnation. Hell contains foul smells and evil food, a smothering darkness, and souls are packed tightly together although they believe they are in total isolation.[51]

In ancient Zoroastrian eschatology, a 3,000-year struggle between good and evil will be fought, punctuated by evil's final assault. During the final assault, the sun and moon will darken, and humankind will lose its reverence for religion, family, and elders. The world will fall into winter, and Angra Mainyu's most fearsome miscreant, Azi Dahaka, will break free and terrorize the world.[51]

According to legend, the final savior of the world, known as the Saoshyant, will be born to a virgin impregnated by the seed of Zoroaster while bathing in a lake. The Saoshyant will raise the dead—including those in all afterworlds—for final judgment, returning the wicked to hell to be purged of bodily sin. Next, all will wade through a river of molten metal in which the righteous will not burn but through which the impure will be completely purified. The forces of good will ultimately triumph over evil, rendering it forever impotent but not destroyed. The Saoshyant and Ahura Mazda will offer a bull as a final sacrifice for all time and all humans will become immortal. Mountains will again flatten and valleys will rise; the House of Song will descend to the moon, and the earth will rise to meet them both.[51] Humanity will require two judgments because there are as many aspects to our being: spiritual (menog) and physical (getig).[51]

Practices and rituals

Throughout Zoroastrian history, shrines and temples have been the focus of worship and pilgrimage for adherents of the religion. Early Zoroastrians were recorded as worshiping in the 5th century BCE on mounds and hills where fires were lit below the open skies.[76] In the wake of Achaemenid expansion, shrines were constructed throughout the empire and particularly influenced the role of Mithra, Aredvi Sura Anahita, Verethragna and Tishtrya, alongside other traditional Yazata who all have hymns within the Avesta and also local deities and culture-heroes. Today, enclosed and covered fire temples tend to be the focus of community worship where fires of varying grades are maintained by the clergy assigned to the temples.[77]

The incorporation of cultural and local rituals is quite common and traditions have been passed down in historically Zoroastrian communities such as herbal healing practices, wedding ceremonies, and the like.[78][79][43] Traditionally, Zoroastrian rituals have also included shamanic elements involving mystical methods such as spirit travel to the invisible realm and involving the consumption of fortified wine, Haoma, mang, and other ritual aids.[80][45][81][82][83]

According to former South Asian studies professor Bettina Robotika, purification ceremonies associated with water (aban) and fire (atar) are considered the basis of Zoroastrian ritual life. Some Zoroastrian communities practice ritual exposure, mainly in regions of the Indian subcontinent where the practice is legal and there are healthy populations of scavenger birds. A corpse is considered a host for decay or druj, and scripture enjoins that it be disposed in a manner that does not pollute the good creation. Structures called Towers of Silence are commonly identified with this practice.[85]

The central ritual of Zoroastrianism is the Yasna, which is a recitation of the eponymous book of the Avesta and sacrificial ritual ceremony involving Haoma.[86] Extensions to the Yasna ritual are possible through use of the Visperad and Vendidad, but such an extended ritual is rare in modern Zoroastrianism.[87][88] The Yasna itself descended from Indo-Iranian sacrificial ceremonies and animal sacrifice of varying degrees are mentioned in the Avesta and are still practiced in Zoroastrianism albeit through reduced forms such as the sacrifice of fat before meals.[89] High rituals such as the Yasna are considered to be the purview of the Mobads with a corpus of individual and communal rituals and prayers included in the Khordeh Avesta.[86][90]

A Zoroastrian is welcomed into the faith through the Navjote/Sedreh Pushi ceremony, which is traditionally conducted during the later childhood or pre-teen years of the aspirant, though there is no defined age limit for the ritual.[43][91] After the ceremony, Zoroastrians are encouraged to wear their sedreh (ritual shirt) and kushti (ritual girdle) daily as a spiritual reminder and for mystical protection, though reformist Zoroastrians tend to only wear them during festivals, ceremonies, and prayers.[92][43][91]

Historically, Zoroastrians are encouraged to pray the five daily Gāhs and to maintain and celebrate the various holy festivals of the Zoroastrian calendar, which can differ from community to community.[93][94] Zoroastrian prayers, called manthras, are conducted usually with hands outstretched in imitation of Zoroaster's prayer style described in the Gathas and are of a reflectionary and supplicant nature believed to be endowed with the ability to banish evil.[95][96][64] Devout Zoroastrians are known to cover their heads during prayer, either with traditional topi, scarves, other headwear, or even just their hands. However, full coverage and veiling which is traditional in Islamic practice is not a part of Zoroastrianism and Zoroastrian women in Iran wear their head coverings displaying hair and their faces to defy mandates by the Islamic Republic of Iran.[97]

Avesta

Main articles: Avesta and Avestan

The Avesta is a collection of the central religious texts of Zoroastrianism written in the old Iranian dialect of Avestan. The history of the Avesta is speculated upon in many Pahlavi texts with varying degrees of authority, with the current version of the Avesta dating at oldest from the times of the Sasanian Empire.[98] The Avesta was "composed at different times, providing a series of snapshots of the religion that allow historians to see how it changed over time".[99] According to Middle Persian tradition, Ahura Mazda created the 21 Nasks of the original Avesta which Zoroaster brought to Vishtaspa. Here, two copies were created, one which was put in the house of archives and the other put in the Imperial treasury. During Alexander's conquest of Persia, the Avesta (written on 1,200 ox-hides) was burned, and the scientific sections that the Greeks could use were dispersed among themselves. However, there is no strong historical evidence for this and they remain contested despite affirmations from the Zoroastrian tradition, whether it be the Denkart, Tansar-nāma, Ardāy Wirāz Nāmag, Bundahsin, Zand-i Wahman yasn or the transmitted oral tradition.[98][100]

As tradition continues, under the reign of King Valax (identified with a Vologases of the Arsacid dynasty[101]), an attempt was made to restore what was considered the Avesta. During the Sassanid Empire, Ardeshir ordered Tansar, his high priest, to finish the work that King Valax had started. Shapur I sent priests to locate the scientific text portions of the Avesta that were in the possession of the Greeks.[102] Under Shapur II, Arderbad Mahrespandand revised the canon to ensure its orthodox character, while under Khosrow I, the Avesta was translated into Pahlavi.

The compilation of the Avesta can be authoritatively traced, however, to the Sasanian Empire, of which only fraction survive today if the Middle Persian literature is correct.[98] The later manuscripts all date from after the fall of the Sasanian Empire, the latest being from 1288, 590 years after the fall of the Sasanian Empire. The texts that remain today are the Gathas, Yasna, Visperad and the Vendidad, of which the latter's inclusion is disputed within the faith.[103] Along with these texts is the individual, communal, and ceremonial prayer book called the Khordeh Avesta, which contains the Yashts and other important hymns, prayers, and rituals. The rest of the materials from the Avesta are called "Avestan fragments" in that they are written in Avestan, incomplete, and generally of unknown provenance.[104]

Middle Persian (Pahlavi)

Middle Persian and Pahlavi works created in the 9th and 10th century contain many religious Zoroastrian books, as most of the writers and copyists were part of the Zoroastrian clergy. The most significant and important books of this era include the Denkard, Bundahishn, Menog-i Khrad, Selections of Zadspram, Jamasp Namag, Epistles of Manucher, Rivayats, Dadestan-i-Denig, and Arda Viraf Namag. All Middle Persian texts written on Zoroastrianism during this time period are considered secondary works on the religion, and not scripture.[citation needed]

History

Zoroaster

Main article: Zoroaster

Zoroastrianism was founded by Zoroaster in ancient Iran. The precise date of the founding of the religion is uncertain and estimates vary wildly from 2000 BCE to "200 years before Alexander". Zoroaster was born – in either Northeast Iran or Southwest Afghanistan – into a culture with a polytheistic religion, which featured excessive animal sacrifice[105] and the excessive ritual use of intoxicants. His life was influenced profoundly by the attempts of his people to find peace and stability in the face of constant threats of raiding and conflict. Zoroaster's birth and early life are little documented but speculated upon heavily in later texts. What is known is recorded in the Gathas, forming the core of the Avesta, which contain hymns thought to have been composed by Zoroaster himself. Born into the Spitama clan, he refers to himself as a poet-priest and prophet. He had a wife, three sons, and three daughters, the numbers of which are gathered from various texts.[106]

Zoroaster rejected many of the gods of the Bronze Age Iranians and their oppressive class structure, in which the Kavis and Karapans (princes and priests) controlled the ordinary people. He also opposed cruel animal sacrifices and the excessive use of the possibly hallucinogenic Haoma plant (conjectured to have been a species of ephedra or Peganum harmala), but did not condemn either practice outright, providing moderation was observed.[89][107]

Legendary accounts

According to later Zoroastrian tradition, when Zoroaster was 30 years old, he went into the Daiti river to draw water for a Haoma ceremony; when he emerged, he received a vision of Vohu Manah. After this, Vohu Manah took him to the other six Amesha Spentas, where he received the completion of his vision.[108] This vision radically transformed his view of the world, and he tried to teach this view to others. Zoroaster believed in one supreme creator deity and acknowledged this creator's emanations (Amesha Spenta) and other divinities which he called Ahuras (Yazata).[31] Some of the deities of the old religion, the Daevas (etymologically similar to the Sanskrit Devas), appeared to delight in war and strife and were condemned as evil workers of Angra Mainyu by Zoroaster.[109]

Zoroaster's ideas were not taken up quickly; he originally only had one convert: his cousin Maidhyoimanha.[110]

Cypress of Kashmar

Main article: Cypress of Kashmar

The Cypress of Kashmar is a mythical cypress tree of legendary beauty and gargantuan dimensions. It is said to have sprung from a branch brought by Zoroaster from Paradise and to have stood in today's Kashmar in northeastern Iran and to have been planted by Zoroaster in honor of the conversion of King Vishtaspa to Zoroastrianism. According to the Iranian physicist and historian Zakariya al-Qazwini King Vishtaspa had been a patron of Zoroaster who planted the tree himself. In his ʿAjā'ib al-makhlūqāt wa gharā'ib al-mawjūdāt, he further describes how the Abbasid caliph Al-Mutawakkil in 247 AH (861 CE) caused the mighty cypress to be felled, and then transported it across Iran, to be used for beams in his new palace at Samarra. Before, he wanted the tree to be reconstructed before his eyes. This was done in spite of protests by the Iranians, who offered a very great sum of money to save the tree. Al-Mutawakkil never saw the cypress, because he was murdered by a Turkish soldier (possibly in the employ of his son) on the night when it arrived on the banks of the Tigris.[111][112]

Fire Temple of Kashmar

Kashmar Fire Temple was the first Zoroastrian fire temple built by Vishtaspa at the request of Zoroaster in Kashmar. In a part of Ferdowsi's Shahnameh, the story of finding Zarathustra and accepting Vishtaspa's religion is regulated that after accepting Zoroastrian religion, Vishtaspa sends priests all over the universe And Azar enters the fire temples (domes) and the first of them is Adur Burzen-Mihr who founded in Kashmar and planted a cypress tree in front of the fire temple and made it a symbol of accepting the Bahi religion And he sent priests all over the world, and commanded all the famous men and women to come to that place of worship.[113]

According to the Paikuli inscription, during the Sasanian Empire, Kashmar was part of Greater Khorasan, and the Sasanians worked hard to revive the ancient religion. It still remains a few kilometers above the ancient city of Kashmar in the castle complex of Atashgah.[114]

The roots of Zoroastrianism are thought to lie in a common prehistoric Indo-Iranian religious system dating back to the early 2nd millennium BCE.[115] The prophet Zoroaster himself, though traditionally dated to the 6th century BCE,[116][13][117] is thought by many modern historians to have been a reformer of the polytheistic Iranian religion who lived much earlier during the second half of the second millennium BCE.[118][119][120][121] Zoroastrian tradition names Airyanem Vaejah as the home of Zarathustra and the birthplace of the religion. No consensus exists as to the localization of Airyanem Vaejah, but the region of Khwarezm has been considered by modern scholars as a candidate.[122] Zoroastrianism as a religion was not firmly established until centuries later during the Young Avestan period. At this time, the Zoroastrian community was concentrated in the eastern portion of Greater Iran.[123] Although no consensus exists on the chronology of the Avestan period, the lack of any discernable Persian and Median influence in the Avesta makes a time frame in the first half of the first millennium BCE likely.[124]

Zoroastrianism enters recorded history in the mid-5th century BCE. Herodotus' The Histories (completed c. 440 BCE) includes a description of Greater Iranian society with what may be recognizably Zoroastrian features, including exposure of the dead.[126]

The Histories is a primary source of information on the early period of the Achaemenid era (648–330 BCE), in particular with respect to the role of the Magi. According to Herodotus, the Magi were the sixth tribe of the Medes (until the unification of the Persian empire under Cyrus the Great, all Iranians were referred to as "Mede" or "Mada" by the peoples of the Ancient World) and wielded considerable influence at the courts of the Median emperors.[127]

Following the unification of the Median and Persian empires in 550 BCE, Cyrus the Great and later his son Cambyses II curtailed the powers of the Magi after they had attempted to sow dissent following their loss of influence. In 522 BCE, the Magi revolted and set up a rival claimant to the throne. The usurper, pretending to be Cyrus' younger son Smerdis, took power shortly thereafter.[128] Owing to the despotic rule of Cambyses and his long absence in Egypt, "the whole people, Persians, Medes and all the other nations" acknowledged the usurper, especially as he granted a remission of taxes for three years.[127]

Darius I and later Achaemenid emperors acknowledged their devotion to Ahura Mazda in inscriptions, as attested to several times in the Behistun inscription and appear to have continued the model of coexistence with other religions. Whether Darius was a follower of the teachings of Zoroaster has not been conclusively established as there is no indication of note that worship of Ahura Mazda was exclusively a Zoroastrian practice.[129]

According to later Zoroastrian legend (Denkard and the Book of Arda Viraf), many sacred texts were lost when Alexander the Great's troops invaded Persepolis and subsequently destroyed the royal library there. Diodorus Siculus's Bibliotheca historica, which was completed c. 60 BCE, appears to substantiate this Zoroastrian legend.[130] According to one archaeological examination, the ruins of the palace of Xerxes I bear traces of having been burned.[131] Whether a vast collection of (semi-)religious texts "written on parchment in gold ink", as suggested by the Denkard, actually existed remains a matter of speculation.[132]

Alexander's conquests largely displaced Zoroastrianism with Hellenistic beliefs,[121] though the religion continued to be practiced many centuries following the demise of the Achaemenids in mainland Persia and the core regions of the former Achaemenid Empire, most notably Anatolia, Mesopotamia, and the Caucasus. In the Cappadocian kingdom, whose territory was formerly an Achaemenid possession, Persian colonists, cut off from their co-religionists in Iran proper, continued to practice the faith [Zoroastrianism] of their forefathers; and there Strabo, observing in the first century BCE, records (XV.3.15) that these "fire kindlers" possessed many "holy places of the Persian Gods", as well as fire temples.[133] Strabo further states that these were "noteworthy enclosures; and in their midst there is an altar, on which there is a large quantity of ashes and where the magi keep the fire ever burning."[133] It was not until the end of the Parthian Empire (247 BCE – 224 CE) that Zoroastrianism would receive renewed interest.[121]

Late antiquity

As late as the Parthian period, a form of Zoroastrianism was without a doubt the dominant religion in the Armenian lands.[135] The Sassanids aggressively promoted the Zurvanite form of Zoroastrianism, often building fire temples in captured territories to promote the religion. During the period of their centuries-long suzerainty over the Caucasus, the Sassanids made attempts to promote Zoroastrianism there with considerable successes.[citation needed]

Due to its ties to the Christian Roman Empire, Persia's archrival since Parthian times, the Sassanids were suspicious of Roman Christianity, and after the reign of Constantine the Great, sometimes persecuted it.[136] In 451 CE, the Sassanid authority clashed with their Armenian subjects in the Battle of Avarayr, making them officially break with the Roman Church. But the Sassanids tolerated or even sometimes favored the Christianity of the Church of the East. The acceptance of Christianity in Georgia (Caucasian Iberia) saw the Zoroastrian religion there slowly but surely decline,[137] but as late the 5th century CE, it was still widely practised as something like a second established religion.[138][139]

Over the course of 22 years during the 7th century, most of the Sasanian Empire was conquered by the emerging Muslim caliphate.[140] Although the administration of the state was rapidly Islamicized and subsumed under the Umayyad Caliphate, in the beginning "there was little serious pressure" exerted on newly subjected people to adopt Islam.[141] Because of their sheer numbers, the conquered Zoroastrians had to be treated as dhimmis (despite doubts of the validity of this identification that persisted down the centuries),[142] which made them eligible for protection. Islamic jurists took the stance that only Muslims could be perfectly moral, but "unbelievers might as well be left to their iniquities, so long as these did not vex their overlords."[142] In the main, once the conquest was over and "local terms were agreed on", the Arab governors protected the local populations in exchange for tribute.[142]

The Arabs adopted the Sasanian tax-system, both the land-tax levied on landowners and the poll-tax levied on individuals,[142] called jizya, a tax levied on non-Muslims (i.e., the dhimmis). In time, this poll-tax came to be used as a means to humble the non-Muslims, and a number of laws and restrictions evolved to emphasize their inferior status. Under the early orthodox caliphs, as long as the non-Muslims paid their taxes and adhered to the dhimmi laws, administrators were enjoined to leave non-Muslims "in their religion and their land".[143]

Under Abbasid rule, Muslim Iranians (who by then were in the majority) in many instances showed severe disregard for and mistreated local Zoroastrians. For example, in the 9th century, a deeply venerated cypress tree in Khorasan (which Parthian-era legend supposed had been planted by Zoroaster himself) was felled for the construction of a palace in Baghdad, 2,000 miles (3,200 km) away. In the 10th century, on the day that a Tower of Silence had been completed at much trouble and expense, a Muslim official contrived to get up onto it, and to call the adhan (the Muslim call to prayer) from its walls. This was turned into a pretext to annex the building.[144]

Ultimately, Muslim scholars like Al-Biruni found few records left of the belief of for instance the Khawarizmians because figures like Qutayba ibn Muslim "extinguished and ruined in every possible way all those who knew how to write and read the Khawarizmi writing, who knew the history of the country and who studied their sciences." As a result, "these things are involved in so much obscurity that it is impossible to obtain an accurate knowledge of the history of the country since the time of Islam..."[145]

Conversion

Though subject to a new leadership and harassment, the Zoroastrians were able to continue their former ways, although there was a slow but steady social and economic pressure to convert,[146][147] with the nobility and city-dwellers being the first to do so, while Islam was accepted more slowly among the peasantry and landed gentry.[148] "Power and worldly-advantage" now lay with followers of Islam, and although the "official policy was one of aloof contempt, there were individual Muslims eager to proselytize and ready to use all sorts of means to do so."[147]

In time, a tradition evolved by which Islam was made to appear as a partly Iranian religion. One example of this was a legend that Husayn, son of the fourth caliph Ali and grandson of Islam's prophet Muhammad, had married a captive Sassanid princess named Shahrbanu. This "wholly fictitious figure"[149] was said to have borne Husayn a son, the historical fourth Shi'a imam, who insisted that the caliphate rightly belonged to him and his descendants, and that the Umayyads had wrongfully wrested it from him. The alleged descent from the Sassanid house counterbalanced the Arab nationalism of the Umayyads, and the Iranian national association with a Zoroastrian past was disarmed. Thus, according to scholar Mary Boyce, "it was no longer the Zoroastrians alone who stood for patriotism and loyalty to the past."[149] The "damning indictment" that becoming Muslim was un-Iranian only remained an idiom in Zoroastrian texts.[149]

With Iranian support, the Abbasids overthrew the Umayyads in 750, and in the subsequent caliphate government—that nominally lasted until 1258—Muslim Iranians received marked favor in the new government, both in Iran and at the capital in Baghdad. This mitigated the antagonism between Arabs and Iranians but sharpened the distinction between Muslims and non-Muslims. The Abbasids zealously persecuted heretics, and although this was directed mainly at Muslim sectarians, it also created a harsher climate for non-Muslims.[150]

Survival

The fire temple of Baku, c. 1860

Despite economic and social incentives to convert, Zoroastrianism remained strong in some regions, particularly in those furthest away from the Caliphate capital at Baghdad. In Bukhara (present-day Uzbekistan), resistance to Islam required the 9th-century Arab commander Qutaiba to convert his province four times. The first three times the citizens reverted to their old religion. Finally, the governor made their religion "difficult for them in every way", turned the local fire temple into a mosque, and encouraged the local population to attend Friday prayers by paying each attendee two dirhams.[147] The cities where Arab governors resided were particularly vulnerable to such pressures, and in these cases the Zoroastrians were left with no choice but to either conform or migrate to regions that had a more amicable administration.[147]

The 9th century came to define the great number of Zoroastrian texts that were composed or re-written during the 8th to 10th centuries (excluding copying and lesser amendments, which continued for some time thereafter). All of these works are in the Middle Persian dialect of that period (free of Arabic words) and written in the difficult Pahlavi script (hence the adoption of the term "Pahlavi" as the name of the variant of the language, and of the genre, of those Zoroastrian books). If read aloud, these books would still have been intelligible to the laity. Many of these texts are responses to the tribulations of the time, and all of them include exhortations to stand fast in their religious beliefs.[citation needed]

Museum of Zoroastrians in Kerman

In Khorasan in northeastern Iran, a 10th-century Iranian nobleman brought together four Zoroastrian priests to transcribe a Sassanid-era Middle Persian work titled Book of the Lord (Khwaday Namag) from Pahlavi script into Arabic script. This transcription, which remained in Middle Persian prose (an Arabic version, by al-Muqaffa, also exists), was completed in 957 and subsequently became the basis for Firdausi's Book of Kings. It became enormously popular among both Zoroastrians and Muslims, and also served to propagate the Sassanid justification for overthrowing the Arsacids.[citation needed]

Among migrations were those to cities in (or on the margins of) the great salt deserts, in particular to Yazd and Kerman, which remain centers of Iranian Zoroastrianism to this day. Yazd became the seat of the Iranian high priests during Mongol Ilkhanate rule, when the "best hope for survival [for a non-Muslim] was to be inconspicuous."[151] Crucial to the present-day survival of Zoroastrianism was a migration from the northeastern Iranian town of "Sanjan in south-western Khorasan",[152] to Gujarat, in western India. The descendants of that group are today known as the Parsis—"as the Gujaratis, from long tradition, called anyone from Iran"[152]—who today represent the larger of the two groups of Zoroastrians in India.[153]

The struggle between Zoroastrianism and Islam declined in the 10th and 11th centuries.

Local Iranian dynasties, "all vigorously Muslim,"[152] had emerged as largely independent vassals of the Caliphs. In the 16th century, in one of the early letters between Iranian Zoroastrians and their co-religionists in India, the priests of Yazd lamented that "no period [in human history], not even that of Alexander, had been more grievous or troublesome for the faithful than 'this millennium of the demon of Wrath'."[154]

Zoroastrianism has survived into the modern period, particularly in India, where the Parsis are thought to have been present since about the 9th century.[155]

Today Zoroastrianism can be divided in two main schools of thought: reformists and traditionalists. Traditionalists are mostly Parsis and accept, beside the Gathas and Avesta, also the Middle Persian literature and like the reformists mostly developed in their modern form from 19th century developments. They generally do not allow conversion to the faith and, as such, for someone to be a Zoroastrian they must be born of Zoroastrian parents. Some traditionalists recognize the children of mixed marriages as Zoroastrians, though usually only if the father is a born Zoroastrian.[156] Not all Zoroastrians identify with either school. Notable examples gaining traction include Neo-Zoroastrians/Revivalists, which are usually reinterpretations of Zoroastrianism appealing towards Western concerns,[157] and centering the idea of Zoroastrianism as a living religion. These advocate the revival and maintenance of old rituals and prayers while supporting ethical and social progressive reforms. Both of these latter schools tend to center the Gathas without outright rejecting other texts except the Vendidad.[158]

From the 19th century onward, the Parsis gained a reputation for their education and widespread influence in all aspects of society. They played an instrumental role in the economic development of the region over many decades; several of the best-known business conglomerates of India are run by Parsi-Zoroastrians, including the Tata,[159] Godrej, Wadia families, and others.[160]

For a variety of social and political factors, the Zoroastrians of the Indian subcontinent, namely the Parsis and Iranis, have not engaged in conversion since at least the 18th century. Zoroastrian high priests have historically opined there is no reason to not allow conversion, which is also supported by the Revayats and other scripture, though later priests have condemned these judgements.[161][26] Within Iran, many of the beleaguered Zoroastrians have been also historically opposed or not practically concerned with the matter of conversion. Currently though, The Council of Tehran Mobeds (the highest ecclesiastical authority within Iran) endorses conversion but conversion from Islam to Zoroastrianism is illegal under the laws of the Islamic Republic of Iran.[156][26]

Though the Armenians share a rich history affiliated with Zoroastrianism (that eventually declined with the advent of Christianity), reports indicate that there were Zoroastrians in Armenia until the 1920s.[162]

At the request of the government of Tajikistan, UNESCO declared 2003 a year to celebrate the "3,000th anniversary of Zoroastrian culture", with special events throughout the world. In 2011, the Tehran Mobeds Anjuman announced that for the first time in the history of modern Iran and of the modern Zoroastrian communities worldwide, women had been ordained in Iran and North America as mobedyars, meaning women assistant mobeds (Zoroastrian clergy).[163][164][165] The women hold official certificates and can perform the lower-rung religious functions and can initiate people into the religion.[166][167]

The current Zoroastrian population is said be around 100,000 to 200,000 and reportedly declining.[168] However, further studies are needed to confirm this, as numbers have also been rising in some areas, such as Iran.[169][170][171]

Zoroastrian communities internationally tend to comprise mostly two main groups of people: Indian Parsis and Iranian Zoroastrians. According to a study in 2012 by the Federation of Zoroastrian Associations of North America, the number of Zoroastrians worldwide was estimated to be between 111,691 and 121,962. The number is imprecise because of diverging counts in Iran.[167]

Iran's figures of Zoroastrians have ranged widely; the last census (1974) before the revolution of 1979 revealed 21,400 Zoroastrians.[172] Some 10,000 adherents remain in the Central Asian regions that were once considered the traditional stronghold of Zoroastrianism, i.e., Bactria (see also Balkh), which is in Northern Afghanistan; Sogdiana; Margiana; and other areas close to Zoroaster's homeland. In Iran, emigration, out-marriage and low birth rates are likewise leading to a decline in the Zoroastrian population. Zoroastrian groups in Iran say their number is approximately 60,000.[173] According to the Iranian census data from 2011 the number of Zoroastrians in Iran was 25,271.[174]

Communities exist in Tehran, as well as in Yazd, Kerman and Kermanshah, where many still speak an Iranian language distinct from the usual Persian. They call their language Dari, not to be confused with the Dari spoken in Afghanistan. Their language is also called Gavri or Behdini, literally "of the Good Religion". Sometimes their language is named for the cities in which it is spoken, such as Yazdi or Kermani. Iranian Zoroastrians were historically called Gabrs.[175]

The number of Kurdish Zoroastrians, along with those of non-ethnic converts, has been estimated differently.[176] The Zoroastrian Representative of the Kurdistan Regional Government in Iraq has reported that as many as 100,000 people in Iraqi Kurdistan have converted to Zoroastrianism recently, with some community leaders speculating that even more Zoroastrians in the region are practicing their faith secretly.[177][178][179] However, this has not been confirmed by independent sources.[180] While, 2024 estimates showed a smaller figure of nearly 5,000 living in the region, primarily in Sulaymaniya Governorate of Iraq.[181]

The surge in Kurdish Muslims converting to Zoroastrianism is largely attributed to disillusionment with Islam after experiencing violence and oppression perpetrated by ISIS in the area.[182]

India is considered to be home to a large Zoroastrian population – the descendants of migrants from Iran and today known as the Parsis. In India's 2001 census, the Parsi population numbered at 69,601, representing about 0.006% of the total population of India, with a concentration in and around the city of Mumbai. By 2008, the birth-to-death ratio was 1:5; 200 births per year to 1,000 deaths.[195] India's 2011 census recorded 57,264 Parsi Zoroastrians.[193]

The Zoroastrian population in Pakistan was estimated to number 1,675 people in 2012,

[167] mostly living in Sindh (especially Karachi) followed by Khyber Pakhtunkhwa.[196][197] The National Database and Registration Authority (NADRA) of Pakistan reported that there were 3,650 Parsi voters during the elections in Pakistan in 2013 and 4,235 in 2018.[198] According to the 2023 Pakistani census, there were 2,348 Parsis across the nation, with 1,656 (70.5%) being located in the Karachi Division.[199][200]

North America is thought to be home to 18,000–25,000 Zoroastrians of both South Asian and Iranian backgrounds. As of 2012, the population of Zoroastrians in US was 15,000, making it the third-largest Zoroastrian population in the world after those of India and Iran.[201] According to the 2021 Canadian census, the Zoroastrian Canadian population stood at 7,285, of which 3,630 were Parsis (of South Asian descent) and a further 2,390 of West Asian origin.[202] A further 3,500 live in Australia (mainly in Sydney). Stewart, Hinze & Williams write that 3,000 Kurds have converted to Zoroastrianism in Sweden.[203] According to the 2021 UK census, there were 4,105 Zoroastrians in England and Wales, of which 4,043 were in England. The majority (51%) of these (2,050) were in London, most notably the boroughs of Barnet, Harrow and Westminster. The remaining 49% of English Zoroastrians were scattered relatively evenly throughout the country, with the second and third largest concentrations being Birmingham (72) and Manchester (47).[204] In 2020, Historic England published A Survey of Zoroastrianism Buildings in England with the aim of providing information about buildings that Zoroastrians use in England so that HE can work with communities to enhance and protect those buildings now and in the future. The scoping survey identified four buildings in England.[205]

Indo-Iranian origins

See also: Indo-Iranians and Proto-Indo-Iranian religion

The religion of Zoroastrianism is closest to historical Vedic religion to varying degrees.[clarification needed] Some historians believe that Zoroastrianism, along with similar philosophical revolutions in South Asia were interconnected strings of reformation of a common Indo-Aryan thread. Many traits of Zoroastrianism can be traced to prehistoric Indo-Iranian culture and beliefs, that is, before the migrations that separated the Indo-Aryans and Iranic peoples. Thus, Zoroastrianism shares elements with the historical Vedic religion that also originated in that era. Some examples include cognates between the Avestan word Ahura ("Ahura Mazda") and the Vedic Sanskrit word Asura ('demon', 'evil demigod'); as well as daeva ("demon") and deva ("god") and they both descend from a common Proto-Indo-Iranian religion.[citation needed]

Zoroastrianism inherited ideas from other belief systems and, like other "practiced" religions, contains syncretism.[206] Specifically, Zoroastrianism in Sogdia, the Kushan

Empire, Armenia, China, and other places incorporates local and foreign practices and deities.[207]

Conversely, Zoroastrian influenced Hungarian, Slavic, Ossetian, Turkic and Mongol mythologies, all of which bear extensive light-dark dualisms and possible sun god theonyms related to Hvare-khshaeta.[208][209][210]

Abrahamic religions

Zoroastrianism is sometimes credited with being the first monotheistic religion in history,[21] antedating that of the Israelites and leaving a lasting and profound imprint on Second Temple Judaism and, through it, on later monotheistic religions such as early Christianity and Islam.[25][211] There are clear commonalities and similarities between Zoroastrianism, Judaism and Christianity, such as: monotheism, dualism (i.e., a robust notion of a Devil—but with a positive appraisal of material creation), symbolism of the divine, heaven(s) and hell(s), angels and demons, eschatology and final judgment, a messianic figure and the idea of a savior, a holy spirit, concern with ritual purity, an idealization of wisdom and righteousness, and other doctrines, symbols, practices, and religious features.[212]

According to Mary Boyce, "Zoroaster was thus the first to teach the doctrines of an individual judgement, Heaven and Hell, the future resurrection of the body, the general last judgement, and life everlasting for the reunited soul and body. These doctrines were to become familiar articles of faith to much of mankind, through borrowing by Judaism, Christianity and Islam; yet it is in Zoroastrianism itself that they have their fullest logical coherence. Since Zoroaster insisted both on the goodness of material creation, and hence of the physical body, and on the unwavering impartiality of divine justice."[213]

The interactions between Judaism and Zoroastrianism resulted in transfer of religious ideas between the two religions and as a result, it is believed that Jews under Achaemenid rule were influenced by Zoroastrian angelology, demonology, eschatology, as well as Zoroastrian ideas about compensatory justice in life and after death.[214] It is also postulated that the Jewish high monotheistic concept of God developed during and after the period of the Babylonian captivity, when the Jews had a prolonged exposure to sophisticated Zoroastrian beliefs.[215]

In addition, Zoroastrian concepts seeded dualistic ideas in Jewish eschatology, such as the belief in a savior, the final battle between good and evil, the triumph of good and the resurrection of the dead. These ideas later passed on to Christianity via Zoroastrian-inspired texts of the Old Testament.[216]

According to some sources, such as The Jewish Encyclopedia (1906),[217] there exist many similarities between Zoroastrianism and Judaism. This has led some to propose that key Zoroastrian concepts influenced Judaism. However, other scholars disagree, finding that the general social influence of Zoroastrianism was much more limited, and that no link can be found in Jewish or Christian texts.[218]

Proponents of a link cite similarities between the two: such as dualism (good and evil, divine twins Ahura Mazda "God" and Angra Mainyu "Satan"), image of the deity, eschatology, resurrection and final judgment, messianism, revelation of Zoroaster on a mountain with Moses on Mount Sinai, three sons of Fereydun with three sons of Noah, heaven and hell, angelology and demonology, cosmology of six days or periods of creation, and free will, among others. Other scholars diminish or reject such influences,[219][220][217][221][222][218] noting that "Zoroastrianism has a unique theistic doctrine which combines dualism, polytheism and pantheism", rather than being a monotheistic religion.[218] Others say "there is little concrete evidence about the precise origin and development of" Zoroastrianism,[223] and that "Zoroastrianism does not compare with the Jewish belief in the sovereignty of God over the whole of creation."[224]

Others, such as Lester L. Grabbe, have said "there is general agreement that Persian religion and tradition had its influence on Judaism over the centuries" and the "question is where this influence was and which of the developments in Judaism can be ascribed to the Iranian side as opposed to the effect of the Greek or other cultures".[220] There exist distinctions but also similarities between Zoroastrian and Jewish law regarding marriage and procreation.[225] While Mary Boyce claims, besides Abrahamic religions, Zoroastrian influence also extended to Northern Buddhism.[226]

Islam
Zoroastrians are considered to be a "People of the Book" by Muslims.[227]

Manichaeism
Zoroastrianism is often compared with Manichaeism. Nominally an Iranian religion, Manichaeism was heavily inspired by Zoroastrianism[228] because of Mani's Iranian origin, and it was also rooted in prior Middle-Eastern Gnostic beliefs.[219][226][220]

Manichaeism adopted many of the Yazatas for its own pantheon[229] Gherardo Gnoli, in The Encyclopaedia of Religion,[230] says that "we can assert that Manichaeism has its roots in the Iranian religious tradition and that its relationship to Mazdaism, or Zoroastrianism, is more or less like that of Christianity to Judaism".[231]

The two religions have substantial differences.[232]

Present-day Iran
Many aspects of Zoroastrianism are present in the culture and mythologies of the peoples of Greater Iran, not least because Zoroastrianism was a dominant influence on the people of the cultural continent for a thousand years. Even after the rise of Islam and the loss of direct influence, Zoroastrianism remained part of the cultural heritage of the Iranian language-speaking world, in part as festivals and customs, but also because Ferdowsi incorporated a number of the figures and stories from the Avesta in his epic Shāhnāme, which is pivotal to Iranian identity. One notable example is the incorporation of the Yazata Sraosha as an angel venerated within Shia Islam in Iran.[233]

JSTOR 1462275. In brief, the interpretation we favor is that Zoroastrianism combines cosmogonic dualism and eschatological monotheism in a manner unique to itself among the major religions of the world. This combination results in a religious outlook which cannot be categorized as either straightforward dualism or straightforward monotheism, meaning that the question in the title of this paper poses a false dichotomy. The dichotomy arises, we contend, from a failure to take seriously enough the central role played by time in Zoroastrian theology. Zoroastrianism proclaims a movement through time from dualism toward monotheism, i.e., a dualism which is being made false by the dynamics of time, and a monotheism which is being made true by those same dynamics of time. The meaning of the eschaton in Zoroastrianism is thus the triumph of monotheism, the good God Ahura Mazdä having at last won his way through to complete and final ascendancy. But in the meantime there is vital truth to dualism, the neglect of which can only lead to a distortion of the religion's essential teachings.

Skjærvø 2005, pp. 14–15: Ahura Mazdâ's companions include the six 'Life-giving Immortals' and great gods, such as Mithra, the sun god, and others [...]. The forces of evil comprise, notably, Angra Manyu, the Evil Spirit, the bad, old, gods (daêwas), and Wrath (aêshma), which probably embodies the dark night sky itself. Zoroastrianism is therefore a dualistic and polytheistic religion, but with one supreme god, who is the father of the ordered cosmos."

Controversy over Zaraθuštra's date has been an embarrassment of long standing to Zoroastrian studies. If anything approaching a consensus exists, it is that he lived ca. 1000 BCE give or take a century or so, though reputable scholars have proposed dates as widely apart as ca.1750 BCE and "258 years before Alexander.

Daniel, Elton L. (2012). The History of Iran. Greenwood. p. 47. ISBN 978-0313375095. Recent research, however, has cast considerable doubt on this dating and geographical setting. [...] The similarity of the language and metrical system of the Gathas to those of the Vedas, the simplicity of the society depicted throughout the Avesta, and the lack of awareness of great cities, historical rulers, or empires all suggest a different time frame. [...] All in all, it seems likely that Zoroaster and the Avestan people flourished in eastern Iran at a much earlier date (anywhere from 1500 to 900 B.C.) than once thought.

Since the evidence of Young Avestan place names so clearly points to a more eastern location, the Avesta is again understood, nowadays, as an East Iranian text, whose area of composition comprised -- at least -- Sīstån/Arachosia, Herat, Merw and Bactria.

The fact that the oldest Young Avestan texts apparently contain no reference to western Iran, including Media, would seem to indicate that they were composed in eastern Iran before the Median domination reached the area.

Contrast with Henning's observations: Henning, W.B., The Book of Giants, BSOAS, Vol. XI, Part 1, 1943, pp. 52–74:

It is noteworthy that Mani, who was brought up and spent most of his life in a province of the Persian empire, and whose mother belonged to a famous Parthian family, did not make any use of the Iranian mythological tradition. There can no longer be any doubt that the Iranian names of Sām, Narīmān, etc., that appear in the Persian and Sogdian versions of the Book of the Giants, did not figure in the original edition, written by Mani in the Syriac language

AI Overview

Druze mysticism is a secretive, esoteric spiritual path rooted in Islamic theology but blending Greek philosophy, Gnosticism, and Eastern thought, focused on Tawhid (oneness of God), inner truth, and cyclical reincarnation, with spiritual knowledge restricted to an initiated elite (al-Uqqal) while most members (al-Juhhal) live secular lives, emphasizing self-discipline and a unique path to divine unity beyond external rituals like prayer or fasting.

Core Beliefs & Concepts

Unitarian Monotheism (Tawhid): The central tenet is the absolute oneness of God, who is transcendent yet immanent, requiring mystical union rather than external worship.

Reincarnation (Tanāsukh): Souls are reborn immediately into other Druze bodies, creating a closed cycle, which encourages moral living.

Esoteric Knowledge: The faith is veiled, with sacred texts (like the Epistles of Wisdom) and deeper meanings accessible only to the initiated, known as the 'Wise' (al-Uqqal).

Spiritual Hierarchy: A spiritual elite (al-Uqqal) guides the community, while the majority (al-Juhhal) live worldly lives without deep religious commitment.

Divine Mind & Creation: Beliefs include a divine Mind (Aql) and Soul (Nafs) as creative forces, sometimes paralleling modern multiverse concepts.

Practices & Lifestyle

Non-Ritualistic: They reject formal prayer, fasting (like Ramadan), pilgrimage (Hajj), and mosque attendance, focusing on inner spirituality.

Truthfulness & Virtue: Emphasis is placed on ethical conduct, truth in speech, and self-discipline as paths to spiritual growth.

Secrecy & Community: The faith is closed to converts (born into it), fostering strong communal bonds and protecting esoteric teachings from outsiders.

Origins & Influences

Emerging from 11th-century Isma'ili Islam, Druze theology synthesized elements from Gnosticism, Greek philosophy (Plato, Aristotle), Judaism, Christianity, and Eastern mysticism, forming a unique esoteric system.

In essence, Druze mysticism is a journey of the soul towards understanding God's unity, achieved through self-purification and wisdom, rather than strict religious performance, making it more akin to a mystical philosophy than a conventional religion.

The Druze,[b] who call themselves al-Muwaḥḥidūn (lit. 'the monotheists' or 'the unitarians'),[23] are an Arab esoteric religious group[24][25][26] from West Asia who adhere to the Druze faith, an Abrahamic, monotheistic, and syncretic religion whose main tenets assert the unity of God, reincarnation, and the eternity of the soul.[27][28]

Although the Druze faith developed from Isma'ilism, Druze do not identify as Muslims.[29][21][30] They maintain the Arabic language and culture as integral parts of their identity,[31][32][18] with Arabic being their primary language.[33] Most Druze religious practices are kept secret,[34] and conversion to their religion is not permitted for outsiders.[35] Interfaith marriages are rare and strongly discouraged. They differentiate between spiritual individuals, known as "uqqāl", who hold the faith's secrets, and secular ones, known as "juhhāl", who focus on worldly matters.[36] Druze believe that, after completing the cycle of rebirth through successive reincarnations, the soul reunites with the Cosmic Mind (al-ʿaql al-kullī).

The Epistles of Wisdom is the foundational and central text of the Druze faith.[37] The Druze faith originated in Isma'ilism (a branch of Shia Islam),[38] and has been influenced by a diverse range of traditions, including Christianity,[39][40][41] Gnosticism, Neoplatonism,[39][40] Zoroastrianism,[42][43] Manichaeism,[44][45] and Pythagoreanism.[46][47][page needed] This has led to the development of a distinct and secretive theology, characterized by an esoteric interpretation of scripture that emphasizes the importance of the mind and truthfulness.[23][47] Druze beliefs include the concepts of theophany and reincarnation.[48]

The Druze hold Shuaib in high regard, believing him to be the same person as the biblical Jethro.[49] They regard Adam, Noah, Abraham, Moses, Jesus, Muhammad, and the Isma'ili Imam Muhammad ibn Isma'il as prophets.[50] Additionally, Druze tradition honors figures such as Salman the Persian,[51] al-Khidr (whom they identify with Elijah, John the Baptist and Saint George),[52] Job, Luke the Evangelist, and others as "mentors" and "prophets".[53]

The Druze faith is one of the major religious groups in the Levant, with between 800,000 and a million adherents. They are primarily located in Lebanon, Syria, and Israel, with smaller communities in Jordan. They make up 5.5% of Lebanon's population, 3% of Syria's and 1.6% of Israel's. The oldest and most densely populated Druze communities exist in Mount Lebanon and in the south of Syria around Jabal al-Druze (literally the "Mountain of the Druze").[54] The Druze community played a critically important role in shaping the history of the Levant, where it continues to play a significant political role.[55] As a religious minority, they have often faced persecution from various Muslim regimes, including contemporary Islamic extremism.[56][57][58]

Several theories about the origins of the Druze have been proposed, with the Arabian hypothesis being the most widely accepted among historians, intellectuals, and religious leaders within the Druze community.[59] This hypothesis significantly influences the Druze's self-perception, cultural identity, and both oral and written traditions.[31] It suggests that the Druze are descended from 12 Arab tribes that migrated to Syria before and during the early Islamic period.[60][61][62] This perspective is accepted by all Druze communities in Syria and Lebanon, as well as by most Druze in Israel.[c][67]

Etymology

The name Druze is probably derived from the name of Muhammad bin Ismail Nashtakin ad-Darazī (from Persian darzi, "seamster") who was an early preacher. Although the Druze consider ad-Darazī a heretic,[68] the name has been used to identify them, possibly by their historical opponents as a way to attach their community with ad-Darazi's poor reputation.

Before becoming public, the movement was secretive and held closed meetings in what was known as Sessions of Wisdom. During this stage a dispute occurred between ad-Darazi and Hamza bin Ali mainly concerning ad-Darazi's ghuluww ("exaggeration"), which refers to the belief that God was incarnated in human beings to ad-Darazi naming himself "The Sword of the Faith", which led Hamza to write an epistle refuting the need for the sword to spread the faith and several epistles refuting the beliefs of the ghulat.

In 1016 ad-Darazi and his followers openly proclaimed their beliefs and called people to join them, causing riots in Cairo against the Unitarian movement including Hamza bin Ali and his followers. This led to the suspension of the movement for one year and the expulsion of ad-Darazi and his supporters.[20]

Although the Druze religious books describe ad-Darazi as the "insolent one" and as the "calf" who is narrow-minded and hasty, the name "Druze" is still used for identification and for historical reasons. In 1018, ad-Darazi was assassinated for his teachings; some sources claim that he was executed by Al-Hakim bi-Amr Allah.[68][69]

Some authorities see in the name "Druze" a descriptive epithet, derived from Arabic dārisah ("she who studies").[70] Others have speculated that the word comes from the Persian word Darazo (درز "bliss") or from Shaykh Hussayn ad-Darazī, who was one of the early converts to the faith.[71] In the early stages of the movement, the word "Druze" is rarely mentioned by historians, and in Druze religious texts only the word Muwaḥḥidūn ("Unitarian") appears. The only early Arab historian who mentions the Druze is the eleventh century Christian scholar Yahya of Antioch, who clearly refers to the heretical group created by ad-Darazī, rather than the followers of Hamza ibn 'Alī.[71] As for Western sources, Benjamin of Tudela, the Jewish traveler who passed through Lebanon in or around 1165, was one of the first European writers to refer to the Druze by name. The word Dogziyin ("Druzes") occurs in an early Hebrew edition of his travels, but it is clear that this is a scribal error. Be that as it may, he described the Druze as "mountain dwellers, monotheists, who believe in 'soul eternity' and reincarnation".[72] He also stated that "they loved the Jews".[73]

Location

The number of Druze people worldwide is between 800,000 and one million, with the vast majority residing in the Levant.[74] The primary countries with Druze populations are Syria, Lebanon, Israel and Jordan.[75][76]

According to the Institute of Druze Studies, as of 1998, approximately 40–50% of Druze live in Syria, 30–40% in Lebanon, 6–7% in Israel, and 1–2% in Jordan.[75] About 2% of the Druze are scattered across other Middle Eastern countries, and there were approximately 20,000 Druze in the United States at that time.[75][77] Scholar Colbert C. Held from the University of Nebraska–Lincoln estimates that the global Druze population is around 1 million. He notes that about 45% to 50% live in Syria, 35% to 40% live in Lebanon, and less than 10% live in Israel. Recently, there has been a growing Druze diaspora.[78]

Outside the Middle East, significant Druze communities exist in Australia, Canada, Europe, Latin America (mainly Venezuela,[10] Colombia and Brazil[dubious – discuss]), the United States, and West Africa. They are Arabs who speak Levantine Arabic and follow a social pattern very similar to those of the other peoples of the Levant (eastern Mediterranean).[79] In 2021 the largest Druze communities outside the Middle East are in Venezuela, with approximately 60,000, and in the United States, with around 50,000.[80] In 2017, the Los Angeles Times reported about 30,000 Druze in the United States, with the largest concentration in Southern California.[81]

History

Early history

The story of the creation of the Druze faith in the days between 1017 and 1018 is dominated by three men and their struggle for influence.

Hamza ibn Ali ibn Ahmad was an Ismaili mystic and scholar from Khorasan, who arrived in Fatimid Egypt in 1014 or 1016, and began to preach a Muwaḥḥidūn ("Unitarian") doctrine.[5]
al-Hakim bi-Amr Allah, the sixth Fātimid caliph, became a central figure in the faith being preached by Hamza ibn Ali ibn Ahmad.[82]
Muhammad bin Ismail Nashtakin ad-Darazi arrived in Cairo in 1015 or 1017, possibly from Bukhara, joined the movement and became an important preacher.

Hamza ibn Ali ibn Ahmad arrives in Cairo

Hamza ibn Ali ibn Ahmad, an Ismaili mystic and scholar from Zozan, Khorasan, in the Samanid Empire.[5] arrived in Fatimid Egypt in 1014 or 1016.[5] He assembled a group of scholars that met regularly in the Raydan Mosque, near the Al-Hakim Mosque.[83] In 1017, Hamza began to preach a Muwaḥḥidūn (Unitarian) doctrine.

al-Darazi arrives in Cairo

Little is known about the early life of al-Darazi. According to most sources, he was born in Bukhara. He is believed to have been of Persian origins and his title al-Darazi is

Persian in origin, meaning "the tailor".[89] He arrived in Cairo in 1015, or 1017, after which he joined the newly emerged Druze movement.[90]

Al-Darazi was converted early to the Unitarian faith and became one of its early preachers. At that time, the movement enlisted a large number of adherents.[91] As the number of his followers grew, he became obsessed with his leadership and gave himself the title "The Sword of the Faith". Al-Darazi argued that he should be the leader of the da‘wah rather than Hamza ibn Ali and gave himself the title "Lord of the Guides" because Caliph al-Hakim referred to Hamza as "Guide of the Consented". It is said that al-Darazi allowed wine, forbidden marriages and taught metempsychosis[92] although this may be exaggeration by contemporary and later historians and polemicists.

This attitude led to disputes between Ad-Darazi and Hamza ibn Ali, who disliked his behavior and his arrogance. In the Epistles of Wisdom, Hamza ibn Ali ibn Ahmad warns al-Darazi, saying, "Faith does not need a sword to aid it", but al-Darazi ignored Hamza's warnings and continued to challenge the Imam.

al-Darazi issues the unitarian call

Sixth Fatimid caliph, al-Hakim bi-Amr Allah

The divine call or unitarian call is the Druze period of time that was opened at sunset on Thursday, 30 May 1017 by Ad-Darazi. The call summoned people to a true unitarian belief that removed all attributes (wise, just, outside, inside, etc.) from God.[93] It promoted absolute monotheism and the concepts of supporting your fellow man, true speech and pursuit of oneness with God. These concepts superseded all ritual, law and dogma and requirements for pilgrimage, fasting, holy days, prayer, charity, devotion, creed and particular worship of any prophet or person was downplayed. Sharia was opposed and Druze traditions started during the call continue today, such as meeting for reading, prayer and social gathering on a Thursday instead of a Friday at Khalwats instead of mosques. Such gatherings and traditions were not compulsory and people were encouraged to pursue a state of compliance with the real law of nature governing the universe.[94] Epistle thirteen of the Epistles of Wisdom called it "A spiritual doctrine without any ritualistic imposition".[95][page needed]

The time of the call was seen as a revolution of truth, with missionaries preaching its message all around the Middle East. These messengers were sent out with the Druze epistles and took written vows from believers, whose souls are thought to still exist in the Druze of today. The souls of those who took the vows during the call are believed to be continuously reincarnating in successive generations of Druze until the return of al-Hakim to proclaim a second Divine call and establish a Golden Age of justice and peace for all.[96]

al-Darazi is executed

By 1018, al-Darazi had gathered around him partisans—"Darazites"—who believed that universal reason became incarnated in Adam at the beginning of the world, was then passed to the prophets, then into Ali, and then into his descendants, the Fatimid Caliphs.[92] Al-Darazi wrote a book laying out this doctrine, but when he read from his book in the principal mosque in Cairo, it caused riots and protests against his claims and many of his followers were killed.

Hamza ibn Ali rejected al-Darazi's ideology, calling him "the insolent one and Satan".[92] The controversy led Caliph al-Hakim to suspend the Druze daʿwah in 1018.[97]

In an attempt to gain the support of al-Hakim, al-Darazi started preaching that al-Hakim and his ancestors were the incarnation of God.[91] An inherently modest man, al-Hakim did not believe that he was God, and felt al-Darazi was trying to depict himself as a new prophet.[91] In 1018 Al-Hakim had al-Darazi executed, leaving Hamza the sole leader of the new faith and al-Darazi considered to be a renegade.[91][97][92]

Disappearance of Al-Hakim

Al-Hakim disappeared one night while on his evening ride—presumably assassinated, perhaps at the behest of his formidable elder sister Sitt al-Mulk. The Druze believe he went into Occultation with Hamza ibn Ali and three other prominent preachers, leaving the care of the "Unitarian missionary movement" to a new leader, al-Muqtana Baha'uddin.[citation needed]

The call was suspended briefly between 19 May 1018 and 9 May 1019 during the apostasy of al-Darazi and again between 1021 and 1026 during a period of persecution by the Fatimid caliph al-Zahir li-I'zaz Din Allah for those who had sworn the oath to accept the call.[95][page needed]

Persecutions started forty days after the disappearance into Occultation of al-Hakim, who was thought to have been converting people to the Unitarian faith for over twenty years prior.[95][page needed] Al-Hakim convinced some heretical followers such as al-Darazi of his soteriological divinity and officially declared the Divine call after issuing a decree promoting religious freedom.[98][95][page needed]

Al-Hakim was replaced by his underage son, al-Zahir li-I'zaz Din Allah. The Unitarian/Druze movement acknowledged al-Zahir as the caliph but continued to regard Hamzah as its Imam.[69] The young caliph's regent, Sitt al-Mulk, ordered the army to destroy the movement in 1021.[68] At the same time, Bahāʾ al-Dīn was assigned the leadership of the Unitarians by Hamza.[69]

For the next seven years, the Druze faced extreme persecution by al-Zahir li-I'zaz Din Allah, who wanted to eradicate the faith.[99] This was the result of a power struggle inside of the Fatimid Calphate, in which the Druze were viewed with suspicion because they refused to recognize the new caliph as their Imam.

Many spies, mainly the followers of al-Darazi, joined the Unitarian movement to infiltrate the Druze community. The spies set about agitating trouble and soiling the reputation of the Druze. This resulted in friction with the new caliph who clashed militarily with the Druze community. The clashes ranged from Antioch to Alexandria, where tens of thousands of Druze were slaughtered by the Fatimid army,[68] "this mass persecution known by the Druze as the period of the mihna".[100] The largest massacre was at Antioch, where 5000 prominent Druze were killed, followed by that of Aleppo.[68] As a result, the faith went underground, in hope of survival, as those captured were either forced to renounce their faith or be killed. Druze survivors "were found principally in southern Lebanon and Syria".

In 1038, two years after the death of al-Zahir li-I'zaz Din Allah, the Druze movement was able to resume because the new leadership that replaced him had friendly political ties with at least one prominent Druze leader.[99]

Closing of the unitarian call

In 1043, Baha al-Din al-Muqtana declared that the sect would no longer accept new pledges, and since that time proselytism has been prohibited awaiting al-Hakim's return at the Last Judgment to usher in a new Golden Age.[101][99]

Some Druze and non-Druze scholars like Samy Swayd and Sami Makarem state that this confusion is due to confusion about the role of the early preacher al-Darazi, whose teachings the Druze rejected as heretical.[102] These sources assert that al-Hakim rejected al-Darazi's claims of divinity,[69][91][103][page needed] and ordered the elimination of his movement while supporting that of Hamza ibn Ali.[104]

During the Crusades

Wadi al-Taym, in Lebanon, was one of the two most important centers of Druze missionary activity in the 11th century[105] and was the first area where the Druze appeared in the historical record under the name "Druze".[106] It is generally considered the birthplace of the Druze faith.[107]

It was during the period of Crusader rule in Levant (1099–1291) that the Druze first emerged into the full light of history in the Gharb region of the Chouf. As powerful warriors serving the leaders in Damascus against the Crusades, the Druze were given the task of keeping watch over the Crusaders in the seaport of Beirut, to prevent them from making any encroachments inland. Subsequently, the Druze chiefs of the Gharb placed their considerable military experience at the disposal of the Mamluk sultans in Egypt (1250–1516); first, to assist them in putting an end to what remained of Crusader rule in the coastal Levant, and later to help them safeguard the Lebanese coast against Crusader retaliation by sea.[108]

In the early period of the Crusader era, the Druze feudal power was in the hands of two families, the Tanukhs and the Arslans. From their fortresses in the Gharb area (now in Aley District of southern Mount Lebanon Governorate), the Tanukhs led their incursions into the Phoenician coast and finally succeeded in holding Beirut and the marine plain against the Franks. Because of their fierce battles with the Crusaders, the Druze earned the respect of the Sunni caliphs and thus gained important political powers.

After the middle of the twelfth century, the Maan family superseded the Tanukhs in Druze leadership. The origin of the family goes back to Prince Ma'an, who made his appearance in Lebanon in the days of the Abbasid caliph al-Mustarshid (1118–35). The Ma'ans chose for their abode the Chouf in south-western Lebanon (southern Mount Lebanon Governorate), overlooking the maritime plain between Beirut and Sidon, and made their headquarters in Baaqlin, which is still a leading Druze village. They were invested with feudal authority by Sultan Nur ad-Din Zengi and furnished respectable contingents to the Muslim ranks in their struggle against the Crusaders.[109][page needed]

Certain aspects of the faith, such as transmigration of souls between adherents and incarnation, were viewed as heretical or kufr (infidelity) and foreign by Sunni and Shia Muslims,[110] but contributed to solidarity among the Druze, who closed their religion to new converts in 1046 due to the threat of persecution.[111] The proto-Salafi thinker ibn Taymiyya believed the Druze had a high level of infidelity besides being apostates. Thus, they were not trustworthy and should not be forgiven. He taught also that Muslims cannot accept Druze penitence nor keep them alive, and that Druze property should be confiscated and their women enslaved.[110][112]

Having cleared the Holy Land of the Crusaders, the Mamluk Sultanate now turned their attention to the schismatic Muslims of Syria. In 1305, after the issuing of a fatwa by the scholar ibn Taymiyya calling for jihad against all non-Sunni Muslim groups like the Druze, Alawites, Isma'ilis, and Twelver Shi'a, al-Nasir Muhammad inflicted a disastrous defeat on the Druze at Keserwan, and forced outward compliance on their part to Sunnism. The Sunni Mamluk campaigns led to the destruction of many Christian churches and monasteries and Druze sanctuaries khilwat, and caused mass destruction of Maronite and Druze villages and the killings and mass displacement of its inhabitants.[113] Lebanese Sunni authors generally write of the campaigns from a pro-Mamluk stance, seeing in them the legitimate Muslim state's efforts to incorporate Mount Lebanon into the Islamic realm, while Druze authors write with a focus on the Druze community's consistent connection to Mount Lebanon and defense of its practical autonomy.[114]

Later, the Druze were severely attacked at Saoufar in the 1585 Ottoman expedition against the Druze after the Ottomans claimed that the Druze had assaulted their caravans near Tripoli.[109][page needed] As a result of the Ottoman experience with the rebellious Druze, the word Durzi in Turkish came, and continues, to mean someone who is the ultimate thug.[115]

The 16th and 17th centuries witnessed a succession of armed Druze rebellions against the Ottomans countered by repeated Ottoman punitive expeditions against the Chouf, in which the Druze population of the area was severely depleted and many villages destroyed. These military measures, severe as they were, did not succeed in reducing the local Druze to the required degree of subordination. This led the Ottoman government to agree to an arrangement whereby the different nahiyahs (districts) of the Chouf would be granted in iltizam ("fiscal concession") to one of the region's amirs, or leading chiefs, leaving the maintenance of law and order and the collection of taxes in the area in the hands of the appointed amir. This arrangement was to provide the cornerstone for the privileged status ultimately enjoyed by the whole of Mount Lebanon, Druze and Christian areas alike.[108]

Ma'an dynasty

The saray in Deir al-Qamar, seat of the Ma'an dynasty under Fakhr al-Din

With the advent of the Ottoman Turks and the conquest of Syria by Sultan Selim I in 1516, the Ma'ans were acknowledged by the new rulers as the feudal lords of southern Lebanon. Druze villages spread and prospered in that region, which under Ma'an leadership so flourished that it acquired the generic term of Jabal Bayt-Ma'an (the mountain home of the Ma'an) or Jabal al-Druze. The latter title has since been usurped by the Hawran region, which since the middle of the 19th century has proven a haven of refuge to Druze emigrants from Lebanon and has become the headquarters of Druze power.[109][page needed]

Under Fakhr-al-Dīn II (Fakhreddin II), the Druze dominion increased until it included Lebanon-Phoenicia and almost all Syria, extending from the edge of the Antioch plain in the north to Safad in the south, with a part of the Syrian desert dominated by Fakhr-al-Din's castle at Tadmur (Palmyra), the ancient capital of Zenobia. The ruins of this castle still stand on a steep hill overlooking the town. Fakhr-al-Din became too strong for his Turkish sovereign in Constantinople. He went so far in 1608 as to sign a commercial treaty with Duke Ferdinand I of Tuscany containing secret military clauses. The Sultan then sent a force against him, and he was compelled to flee the land and seek refuge in the courts of Tuscany and Naples in 1613 and 1615 respectively.

In 1618, political changes in the Ottoman sultanate had resulted in the removal of many enemies of Fakhr-al-Din from power, signaling the prince's triumphant return to Lebanon soon afterwards. Through a clever policy of bribery and warfare, he extended his domains to cover all of modern Lebanon, some of Syria and northern Galilee.

In 1632, Küçük Ahmed Pasha was named Lord of Damascus. Küçük Ahmed Pasha was a rival of Fakhr-al-Din and a friend of the sultan Murad IV, who ordered the pasha and the sultanate's navy to attack Lebanon and depose Fakhr-al-Din.

This time the prince decided to remain in Lebanon and resist the offensive, but the death of his son Ali in Wadi al-Taym was the beginning of his defeat. He later took refuge in Jezzine's grotto, closely followed by Küçük Ahmed Pasha who eventually caught up with him and his family.

A modern, artistic representation of Fakhr-al-Dīn II in the Beiteddine Palace. Fakhr al-Din is considered by the Lebanese as the founder of the country
Fakhr-al-Din was captured, taken to Istanbul, and imprisoned with two of his sons in the infamous Yedi Kule prison. The Sultan had Fakhr-al-Din and his sons killed on 13 April 1635 in Istanbul, bringing an end to an era in the history of Lebanon, which would not regain its current boundaries until it was proclaimed a mandate state and republic in 1920. One version recounts that the younger son was spared, raised in the harem and went on to become Ottoman Ambassador to India.[116]

Fakhr-al-Din II was the first ruler in modern Lebanon to open the doors of his country to foreign Western influences. Under his auspices the French established a khān (hostel) in Sidon, the Florentines a consulate, and Christian missionaries were admitted into the country. Beirut and Sidon, which Fakhr-al-Din II beautified, still bear traces of his benign rule. See the new biography of this Prince, based on original sources, by TJ Gorton: Renaissance Emir: a Druze Warlord at the Court of the Medici (London, Quartet Books, 2013), for an updated view of his life.

Fakhr ad Din II was succeeded in 1635 by his nephew Mulhim Ma'n, who ruled through his death in 1658. (Fakhr ad Din's only surviving son, Husayn, lived the rest of his life as a court official in Constantinople.) Emir Mulhim exercised Iltizam taxation rights in the Shuf, Gharb, Jurd, Matn, and Kisrawan districts of Lebanon. Mulhim's forces battled and defeated those of Mustafa Pasha, Beylerbey of Damascus, in 1642, but he is reported by historians to have been otherwise loyal to Ottoman rule.[117]

Following Mulhim's death, his sons Ahmad and Korkmaz entered into a power struggle with other Ottoman-backed Druze leaders. In 1660, the Ottoman Empire moved to reorganize the region, placing the sanjaks (districts) of Sidon-Beirut and Safed in a newly formed province of Sidon, a move seen by local Druze as an attempt to assert control.[118] Contemporary historian Istifan al-Duwayhi reports that Korkmaz was killed in act of treachery by the Beylerbey of Damascus in 1662.[118] Ahmad however emerged victorious in the power struggle among the Druze in 1667, but the Maʿnīs lost control of Safad[119] and retreated to controlling the iltizam of the Shuf mountains and Kisrawan.[120] Ahmad continued as local ruler through his death from natural causes, without heir, in 1697.[119]

During the Ottoman–Habsburg War (1683–1699), Ahmad Ma'n collaborated in a rebellion against the Ottomans which extended beyond his death.[119] Iltizam rights in Shuf and Kisrawan passed to the rising Shihab family through female-line inheritance.[120]

Shihab Dynasty

As early as the days of Saladin, and while the Ma'ans were still in complete control over southern Lebanon, the Shihab tribe, originally Hijaz Arabs, but later settled in Ḥawran, advanced from Ḥawran, in 1172, and settled in Wadi al-Taym at the foot of mount Hermon. They soon made an alliance with the Ma'ans and were acknowledged as the Druze chiefs in Wadi al-Taym. At the end of the 17th century (1697) the Shihabs succeeded the Ma'ans in the feudal leadership of Druze southern Lebanon, although they reportedly professed Sunni Islam, they showed sympathy with Druze, the religion of the majority of their subjects.

The Shihab leadership continued until the middle of the 19th century and culminated in the illustrious governorship of Amir Bashir Shihab II (1788–1840) who, after Fakhr-al-Din, was the most powerful feudal lord Lebanon produced. Though governor of the Druze Mountain, Bashir was a crypto-Christian, and it was he whose aid Napoleon solicited in 1799 during his campaign against Syria. The "Druze-Christian alliance" during this century was the major factor enabling the Shehab dynasty to maintain power.[121]

Having consolidated his conquests in Syria (1831–1838), Ibrahim Pasha, son of the viceroy of Egypt, Muhammad Ali Pasha, made the fatal mistake of trying to disarm the Christians and Druze of the Lebanon and to draft the latter into his army. This was contrary to the principles of the life of independence which these mountaineers had always lived, and resulted in a general uprising against Egyptian rule.[122] The Druze of Wadi al-Taym and Ḥawran, under the leadership of Shibli al-Aryan, distinguished themselves in their stubborn resistance at their inaccessible headquarters, al-Laja, lying southeast of Damascus.[109][page needed]

Qaysites and the Yemenites

Main article: Battle of Ain Darra

Meeting of Druze and Ottoman leaders in Damascus, about the control of Jebel Druze

The conquest of Syria by the Muslim Arabs in the middle of the seventh century introduced into the land two political factions later called the Qaysites and the Yemenites. The Qaysite party represented the Bedouin Arabs who were regarded as inferior by the Yemenites who were earlier and more cultured emigrants into Syria from southern Arabia. Druze and Christians grouped in political, rather than religious, parties; the party lines in Lebanon obliterated ethnic and religious lines and the people grouped themselves into one or the other of these two parties regardless of their religious affiliations. The sanguinary feuds between these two factions depleted, in course of time, the manhood of the Lebanon and ended in the decisive battle of Ain Dara in 1711, which resulted in the utter defeat of the Yemenite party. Many Yemenite Druze thereupon migrated to the Hauran region, laying the foundation of Druze power there.[109][page needed]

The Qays were led by Emir Haydar of the Shihab dynasty and consisted of the Druze clans of Jumblatt, Talhuq, Imad and Abd al-Malik and the Maronite clan of Khazen. The Yamani faction was led by Mahmoud Abu Harmoush and consisted of the Druze Alam al-Din, Arslan and Sawaf clans. The Yamani faction also had backing from the Ottoman provincial authorities of Sidon and Damascus.[123] The battle ended in a rout of the Yamani faction and resulted in the consolidation of Qaysi political and fiscal domination over Mount Lebanon.[123] The battle's outcome also precipitated a mass migration of pro-Yamani Druze nobility and peasants from Mount Lebanon to the eastern Hauran, in a mountainous area today known as Jabal al-Druze. This area had seen previous waves of Druze migration starting in 1685. Consequently, the Maronite Christian population in Mount Lebanon became the dominant group.[123] The Yamani Druze exodus significantly contributed to a demographic shift in Mount Lebanon, with Maronites and other Christians, namely from the Greek Orthodox and Melkite sects, making up a large share of the population at the expense of the Druze.[124]

Civil conflict of 1860

The relationship between the Druze and Christians has been characterized by harmony and coexistence,[125][126] with amicable relations between the two groups prevailing throughout history, with the exception of some periods, including 1860 civil conflict in Mount Lebanon and Damascus.[127][page needed][128] In 1840, social disturbances started between Druze and their Christian Maronite neighbors, who had previously been on friendly terms. This culminated in the civil war of 1860.[109][page needed]

After the Shehab dynasty converted to Christianity, some prominent Druze families, including the Druze Abi-Lamma clan—who were close allies of the Shihabs—also converted to Christianity and joined the Maronite Church.[129][130][131] The Druze community and feudal leaders came under attack from the regime with the collaboration of the Maronite Catholic Church, and the Druze lost most of their political and feudal powers.[132] Also, the Druze formed an alliance with Britain and allowed Protestant missionaries to enter Mount Lebanon, creating tension between them and the Catholic Maronites.[133]

The Maronite-Druze conflict in 1840–60 was an outgrowth of the Maronite independence movement,[citation needed] directed against the Druze, Druze feudalism, and the Ottoman-Turks. The civil war was not therefore a religious war,[citation needed] except in Damascus, where it spread and where the vastly non-Druze population was anti-Christian.[134] This animosity was fueled by economic disparities, with Christians, who were generally wealthier and more prosperous, compare to the economically struggling Muslim residents.[135] The movement culminated with the 1859–60 massacre and defeat of the Maronites by the Druze. The civil war of 1860 cost the Maronites some ten thousand lives in Damascus, Zahlé, Deir al-Qamar, Hasbaya, and other towns of Lebanon.[136]

The European powers then determined to intervene, and authorized the landing in Beirut of a body of French troops under General Beaufort d'Hautpoul, whose inscription can still be seen on the historic rock at the mouth of Nahr al-Kalb. French intervention on behalf of the Maronites did not help the Maronite national movement, since France was restricted in 1860 by the British government, which did not want the Ottoman Empire dismembered. But European intervention pressured the Turks to treat the Maronites more justly.[137] Following the recommendations of the powers, the Ottoman Porte granted Lebanon local autonomy, guaranteed by the powers, under a Maronite governor. This autonomy was maintained until World War I.[109][page needed][138][page needed]

The Maronite Catholics and the Druze founded modern Lebanon in the early eighteenth century, through the ruling and social system known as the "Maronite-Druze dualism" which developed in Ottoman-era Mount Lebanon Mutasarrifate,[139] creating one of the calmest atmospheres that Lebanon had ever lived in.[140] The ruling and social system in the Mount Lebanon Mutasarrifate was formed from the Maronite-Druze dualism, and the security stability and Druze-Maronite coexistence in the Mutasarrifate allowed the development of the economy and the system of government.[140]

Rebellion in Hauran

Main article: Hauran Druze Rebellion

The Hauran rebellion was a violent Druze uprising against Ottoman authority in the Syrian province, which erupted in May 1909. The rebellion was led by the al-Atrash family, originated in local disputes and Druze unwillingness to pay taxes and conscript into the Ottoman Army. The rebellion ended in brutal suppression of the Druze by General Sami Pasha al-Farouqi, significant depopulation of the Hauran region and execution of the Druze leaders in 1910. In the outcome of the revolt, 2,000 Druze were killed, a similar number wounded, and hundreds of Druze fighters imprisoned.[141] Al-Farouqi also disarmed the population, extracted significant taxes, and launched a census of the region.

Modern history

In Lebanon, Syria, Israel, and Jordan, the Druzites have official recognition as a separate religious community with its own religious court system.[142][page needed][143]

Although most Druze no longer consider themselves Muslim, Al Azhar of Egypt recognized them in 1959 as one of the Islamic sects in the Al-Azhar Shia Fatwa due to political reasons, as Gamal Abdel Nasser saw it as a tool to spread his appeal and influence across the entire Arab world.[144]

The Druze religion does not endorse separatism, and urges blending with the communities they reside in; the Druze have often done so to avoid persecution. Yet the Druze also have a history of resistance to occupying powers, and they have at times enjoyed more freedom than most other groups living in the Levant.[143]

In Syria

In Syria, most Druzites live in the Jebel al-Druze, a rugged and mountainous region in the southwest of the country, which is more than 90 percent Druze inhabited; some 120 villages are exclusively so.[145][page needed] Other notable communities live in the Harim Mountains, the Damascus suburb of Jaramana, and on the southeast slopes of Mount Hermon. A large Syrian Druze community historically lived in the Golan Heights, but following wars with Israel in 1967 and 1973, many of these Druze fled to other parts of Syria; most of those who remained live in a handful of villages in the disputed zone, while only a few live in the narrow remnant of Quneitra Governorate that is still under effective Syrian control.

Druze celebrating their independence in 1925

The Druze always played a far more important role in Syrian politics than its comparatively small population would suggest. With a community of little more than 100,000 in 1949, or roughly three percent of the Syrian population, the Druze of Syria's southwestern mountains constituted a potent force in Syrian politics and played a leading role in the nationalist struggle against the French. Under the military leadership of Sultan Pasha al-Atrash, the Druze provided much of the military force behind the Syrian Revolution of 1925–27. In 1945, Amir Hasan al-Atrash, the paramount political leader of the Jebel al-Druze, led the Druze military units in a successful revolt against the French, making the Jebel al-Druze the first and only region in Syria to liberate itself from French rule without British assistance. At independence the Druze, made confident by their successes, expected that Damascus would reward them for their many sacrifices on the battlefield. They demanded to keep their autonomous administration and many political privileges accorded them by the French and sought generous economic assistance from the newly independent government.[145][page needed]

Druze leaders meeting in Jebel al-Druze, Syria, 1926

When a local paper in 1945 reported that President Shukri al-Quwatli (1943–49) had called the Druze a "dangerous minority", Sultan Pasha al-Atrash flew into a rage and demanded a public retraction. If it were not forthcoming, he announced, the Druze would indeed become "dangerous", and a force of 4,000 Druze warriors would "occupy the city of Damascus". Quwwatli could not dismiss Sultan Pasha's threat. The military balance of power in Syria was tilted in favor of the Druze, at least until the military build up during the 1948 War in Palestine. One advisor to the Syrian Defense Department warned in 1946 that the Syrian army was "useless", and that the Druze could "take Damascus and capture the present leaders in a breeze".[145][page needed]

During the four years of Adib Shishakli's rule in Syria (December 1949 to February 1954) (on 25 August 1952: Adib al-Shishakli created the Arab Liberation Movement (ALM), a progressive party with pan-Arabist and socialist views),[146] the Druze community was subjected to heavy attack by the Syrian government. Shishakli believed that among his many opponents in Syria, the Druze were the most potentially dangerous, and he was determined to crush them. He frequently proclaimed: "My enemies are like a serpent: The head is the Jebel al-Druze, the stomach Homs, and the tail Aleppo. If I crush the head, the serpent will die." Shishakli dispatched 10,000 regular troops to occupy the Jebel al-Druze. Several towns were bombarded with heavy weapons, killing scores of civilians and destroying many houses. According to Druze accounts, Shishakli encouraged neighboring Bedouin tribes to plunder the defenseless population and allowed his own troops to run amok.[145][page needed]

Shishakli launched a brutal campaign to defame the Druze for their religion and politics. He accused the entire community of treason, at times claiming they were in the employ of the British and Hashimites, at others that they were fighting for Israel against the Arabs. He even produced a cache of Israeli weapons allegedly discovered in the Jabal. Even more painful for the Druze community was his publication of "falsified Druze religious texts" and false testimonials ascribed to leading Druze sheikhs designed to stir up sectarian hatred. This propaganda also was broadcast in the Arab world, mainly Egypt. Shishakli was assassinated in Brazil on 27 September 1964 by a Druze seeking revenge for Shishakli's bombardment of the Jebel al-Druze.[145][page needed]

Sculpture of Sultan al-Atrash in Majdal Shams

He forcibly integrated minorities into the national Syrian social structure, his "Syrianization" of Alawite and Druze territories had to be accomplished in part using violence. To this end, al-Shishakli encouraged the stigmatization of minorities. He saw minority demands as tantamount to treason. His increasingly chauvinistic notions of Arab nationalism were predicated on the denial that "minorities" existed in Syria.[147][page needed]

After the Shishakli's military campaign, the Druze community lost much of its political influence, but many Druze military officers played important roles in the Ba'ath government currently ruling Syria.[145][page needed]

In 1967, a community of Druze in the Golan Heights came under Israeli control, today numbering 23,000 (in 2019).[148][149][150]

Before the Syrian civil war, it was estimated that around 700,000 Druze lived in Syria in 2010, constituting about 3% of the population.[151] Of these, approximately 337,500 resided in the Suwayda Governorate, which had a Druze majority of around 90% and a significant Christian minority.[152][151] This region accounted for 48.2% of the total Druze population in Syria.[153] Additionally, about 250,000 Druze, or 35.7% of the total Druze population, lived in Damascus and its surrounding areas, including Jaramana, Sahnaya, and Jdeidat Artouz. Approximately 30,000 Druze lived on the eastern side of Mount Hermon, while around 25,000 Druze were spread across 14 villages in Jabal al-

Summaq in Idlib Governorate.[151]

The Qalb Loze massacre was a reported massacre of Syrian Druze on 10 June 2015 in the village of Qalb Loze in Syria's northwestern Idlib Governorate in which 20–24 Druze were killed. On 25 July 2018, a group of ISIS-affiliated attackers entered the Druze city of Suwayda and initiated a series of gunfights and suicide bombings on its streets, killing at least 258 people, the vast majority of them civilians.[154]

Several Druze militias fought in the Syrian civil war. These included Jaysh al-Muwahhidin which largely engaged in defensive war, though were also described as supporters of Bashar al-Assad and the Ba'athist government.[155] The Druze Al-Jabal Brigade played a major role in the 2024 Syrian opposition offensives, which toppled the Ba'athists.[156]

The Druzite community in Lebanon played an important role in the formation of the modern state of Lebanon,[139] and even though they are a minority they play an important role in the Lebanese political scene. Before and during the Lebanese Civil War (1975–90), the Druze were in favor of Pan-Arabism and Palestinian resistance represented by the PLO. Most of the community supported the Progressive Socialist Party formed by their leader Kamal Jumblatt and they fought alongside other leftist and Palestinian parties against the Lebanese Front that was mainly constituted of Christians. At the time, the Lebanese government and economy were running under the significant influence of elites within the Maronite Christian community.[158][159] After the assassination of Kamal Jumblatt on 16 March 1977, his son Walid Jumblatt took the leadership of the party and played an important role in preserving his father's legacy after winning the Mountain War and sustained the existence of the Druze community during the sectarian bloodshed that lasted until 1990.

In August 2001, Maronite Catholic Patriarch Nasrallah Boutros Sfeir toured the predominantly Druze Chouf region of Mount Lebanon and visited Mukhtara, the ancestral stronghold of Druze leader Walid Jumblatt. The tumultuous reception that Sfeir received not only signified a historic reconciliation between Maronites and Druze, who had fought a bloody war in 1983–1984, but underscored the fact that the banner of Lebanese sovereignty had broad multi-confessional appeal[160] and was a cornerstone for the Cedar Revolution in 2005. Jumblatt's post-2005 position diverged sharply from the tradition of his family. He also accused Damascus of being behind the 1977 assassination of his father, Kamal Jumblatt, expressing for the first time what many knew he privately suspected. The BBC describes Jumblatt as "the leader of Lebanon's most powerful Druze clan and heir to a leftist political dynasty".[161] The second largest political party supported by Druze is the Lebanese Democratic Party led by Prince Talal Arslan, the son of Lebanese independence hero Emir Majid Arslan.

The Druze community is primarily located in the rural and mountainous regions to the east and south of Beirut.[162] They represent approximately 5.2 percent of Lebanon's population and are spread across 136 villages in areas such as Hasbaya, Rashaya, Chouf, Aley, Marjeyoun and Beirut. The Druze make up the majority in Aley, Baakleen, Hasbaya and Rashaya. Specifically, they constitute over half of the population in the Aley District, about a third in the Rashaya District, and around a quarter in both the Chouf and Matn Districts.[163]

Israeli Druze Scouts march to Jethro's tomb. Today, thousands of Israeli Druze belong to such "Druze Zionist" movements.[164]
The Druzites form a religious minority in Israel of more than 100,000, mostly residing in the north of the country.[165] In 2004, there were 102,000 Druze living in the country.[166] In 2010, the population of Israeli Druze citizens grew to over 125,000. At the end of 2018, there were 143,000 in Israel and the Israeli-occupied portion of the Golan Heights.[9] Most Israeli Druze identify ethnically as Arabs.[167] Today, thousands of Israeli Druze belong to "Druze Zionist" movements.[164]

According to the Israeli Central Bureau of Statistics census in 2020, the Druze make up about 7.6% of the Arab citizens of Israel.[168] By the end of 2019, around 81% of the Israeli Druze population resided in the Northern District, while 19% were in the Haifa District. The largest Druze communities are found in Daliyat al-Karmel and Yirka (also known as Yarka).[169] The Druze live in 19 towns and villages scattered across the mountaintops in northern Israel, either in exclusively Druze areas or in mixed communities with Christians and Muslims.[169]

The Galilean Druze and Druze of the Haifa region received Israeli citizenship automatically in 1948. After Israel captured the Golan Heights from Syria in 1967 and annexed it to Israel in 1981, the Druze of the Golan Heights were offered full Israeli citizenship under the Golan Heights Law. Most declined Israeli citizenship and retain Syrian citizenship and identity and are treated as permanent residents of Israel.[170] As of 2011, fewer than 10% of the Druze population in the Golan Heights had accepted Israeli citizenship.[171]

In 1957, the Israeli government designated the Druze a distinct religious community at the request of its communal leaders.[172][173] The Druze are Arabic-speaking citizens of Israel and serve in the Israel Defense Forces, just as most citizens do in Israel. Members of the community have attained top positions in Israeli politics and public service.[174] The number of Druze parliament members usually exceeds their proportion in the Israeli population, and they are integrated within several political parties.

Some scholars maintain that Israel has tried to separate the Druze from other Arab communities, and that the effort has influenced the way Israel's Druze perceive their modern identity.[63][64] Survey data suggests that Israeli Druze prioritize their identity first as Druze (religiously), second as Arabs (culturally and ethnically), and third as Israelis (citizenship-wise).[33] A small minority of them identify as Palestinians, distinguishing them from the majority of other Arab citizens of Israel, who predominantly identify as Palestinians.[166]

In Jordan

Main article: Druze in Jordan

The Druzites form a religious minority in Jordan of around 32,000, mostly residing in the northwestern part of the country.[14] The main areas where they live are Amman, Azraq, Zarqa, Russiefa, Umm Al-Quttein, Aqaba and Mafraq. Druze settlement in Jordan began in 1918, when 22 Druze families left Jabal al-Druze for al-Azraq following the withdrawal of the Turks from the region.[175]

In the diaspora

Venezuela hosts the largest Druze communities outside the Middle East,[176][177] estimated at 60,000 individuals.[80] Most of them trace their ancestry back to Lebanon and Syria. More than 200,000 people from the Suwayda area hold Venezuelan citizenship, the majority of whom belong to the Syria's Druze sect and immigrated to Venezuela in the past century.[178] Arab immigration to Venezuela started as early as the 19th and 20th centuries, with migrants primarily hailing from the Ottoman provinces of Lebanon, Syria, and Palestine. They settled predominantly in Caracas, and have significantly influenced Venezuelan culture, particularly in terms of Arabic food and music. Religiously, the Arab-Venezuelans community consists mainly of Druze and Christians, who are affiliated with the Roman Catholic, Eastern Orthodox and Eastern Rite Catholic Churches.[179] The early Druze migrants to Venezuela assimilated well into the local population, with some even converting Catholicism.[180] Nevertheless, many retained a strong Druze and Arab identity, along with adherence to Druze values. A prominent example of Druze influence in Venezuela is the former vice president, Tareck El Aissami, who is of Druze descent.[10][181] Other notable Venezuelan figures of Druze origin include Haifa El Aissami and Tarek William Saab.[182]

The United States is the second largest home of Druze communities outside the Middle East after Venezuela.[183] Estimates vary between about 30,000[184] and 50,000[183] Druzes in the United States, with the largest concentration in Southern California.[184] American Druze are mostly of Lebanese and Syrian descent.[184] Members of the Druze faith face the difficulty of finding a Druze partner and practicing endogamy; marriage outside the Druze faith is strongly discouraged according to the Druze doctrine. They also face the pressure of keeping the religion alive because many Druze immigrants to the United States converted to Protestantism, becoming communicants of the Presbyterian or Methodist churches.[185][186]

Beliefs

God

The Druze conception of the deity is declared by them to be one of strict and uncompromising unity. The main Druze doctrine states that God is both transcendent and immanent, in which he is above all attributes, but at the same time, he is present.[187]

In their desire to maintain a rigid confession of unity, they stripped from God all attributes (tanzīh). In God, there are no attributes distinct from his essence. He is wise, mighty, and just, not by wisdom, might, and justice, but by his own essence. God is "the whole of existence", rather than merely "above existence" or on his throne, which would make him "limited". There is neither "how", "when", nor "where" about him; in this way, he is incomprehensible.[188][page needed]

In this dogma, they are similar to the semi-philosophical, semi-religious body which flourished under Al-Ma'mun and was known by the name of Mu'tazila and the fraternal order of the Brethren of Purity (Ikhwan al-Ṣafa).[109][page needed]

Unlike the Mu'tazila, and similar to some branches of Sufism, the Druze believe in the concept of Tajalli (meaning "theophany").[188][page needed] Tajalli is often misunderstood by scholars and writers and is usually confused with the concept of incarnation.

[Incarnation] is the core spiritual beliefs in the Druze and some other intellectual and spiritual traditions ... In a mystical sense, it refers to the light of God experienced by certain mystics who have reached a high level of purity in their spiritual journey. Thus, God is perceived as the Lahut [the divine] who manifests His Light in the Station (Maqaam) of the Nasut [material realm] without the Nasut becoming Lahut. This is like one's image in the mirror: One is in the mirror, but does not become the mirror. The Druze manuscripts are emphatic and warn against the belief that the Nasut is God ... Neglecting this warning, individual seekers, scholars, and other spectators have considered al-Hakim and other figures divine. ... In the Druze scriptural view, Tajalli takes a central stage. One author comments that Tajalli occurs when the seeker's humanity is annihilated so that divine attributes and light are experienced by the person.[188][page needed]

Scriptures

Druze sacred texts include the Quran and the Epistles of Wisdom.[189] Other ancient Druze writings include the Rasa'il al-Hind (Epistles of India) and the previously lost (or hidden) manuscripts such as al-Munfarid bi-Dhatihi and al-Sharia al-Ruhaniyya, as well as others such as didactic and polemic treatises.[190]

Reincarnation

See also: Reincarnation § Druze
Reincarnation is a paramount principle in the Druze faith.[191] Reincarnations occur instantly at one's death because there is an eternal duality of the body and the soul and it is impossible for the soul to exist without the body. A human soul will transfer only to a human body, in contrast to the Neoplatonic, Hindu and Buddhist belief systems, according to which souls can transfer to any living creature. Furthermore, a male Druze can be reincarnated only as another male Druze and a female Druze only as another female Druze. A Druze cannot be reincarnated in the body of a non-Druze. Additionally, souls cannot be divided and the number of souls existing in the universe is finite.[192] The cycle of rebirth is continuous and the only way to escape is through successive reincarnations. When this occurs, the soul is united with the Cosmic Mind and achieves the ultimate happiness.[193]

Pact of Time Custodian

The Pact of Time Custodian (Mithāq Walī al-zamān) is considered the entrance to the Druze religion, and they believe that all Druze in their past lives have signed this Charter, and Druze believe that this Charter embodies with human souls after death.

I rely on our Moula Al-Hakim the lonely God, the individual, the eternal, who is out of couples and numbers, (someone) the son of (someone) has approved recognition enjoined on himself and on his soul, in a healthy of his mind and his body, permissibility aversive is obedient and not forced, to repudiate from all creeds, articles and all religions and beliefs on the differences varieties, and he does not know something except obedience of almighty Moulana Al-Hakim, and obedience is worship and that it does not engage in worship anyone ever attended or wait, and that he had handed his soul and his body and his money and all he owns to almighty Maulana Al-Hakim.[194]
[clarification needed]

The Druze also use a similar formula, called al-'ahd, when one is initiated into the ‘Uqqāl.[195]

Sanctuaries

Druze clerics in Khalwat al-Bayada
The prayer-houses of the Druze are called khilwa, khalwa, khilwat or khalwat. The primary sanctuary of the Druze is at Khalwat al-Bayada.[196]

Esotericism

The Druze believe that many teachings given by prophets, religious leaders and holy books have esoteric meanings preserved for those of intellect, in which some teachings are symbolic and allegorical in nature, and divide the understanding of holy books and teachings into three layers.

These layers, according to the Druze, are as follows:

The obvious or exoteric (zahir), accessible to anyone who can read or hear;
The hidden or esoteric (batin), accessible to those who are willing to search and learn through the concept of exegesis;
And the hidden of the hidden, a concept known as anagoge, inaccessible to all but a few really enlightened individuals who truly understand the nature of the universe.[197]
Druze do not believe that the esoteric meaning abrogates or necessarily abolishes the exoteric one. Hamza bin Ali refutes such claims by stating that if the esoteric interpretation of taharah (purity) is purity of the heart and soul, it doesn't mean that a person can discard his physical purity, as salat (prayer) is useless if a person is untruthful in his speech and that the esoteric and exoteric meanings complement each other.[198]

Seven Druze precepts

Further information: Seven pillars of Ismailism § Druze list
The Druze follow seven moral precepts or duties that are considered the core of the faith.[193] The Seven Druze precepts are:[199]

Veracity in speech and the truthfulness of the tongue.
Protection and mutual aid to the brethren in faith.
Renunciation of all forms of former worship (specifically, invalid creeds) and false belief.
Repudiation of the devil (Iblis), and all forces of evil (translated from Arabic Toghyan, meaning "despotism").
Confession of God's unity.
Acquiescence in God's acts no matter what they be.
Absolute submission and resignation to God's divine will in both secret and public.

Taqiyya

Complicating their identity is the custom of taqiyya—concealing or disguising their beliefs when necessary—that they adopted from Ismailism and the esoteric nature of the faith, in which many teachings are kept secretive. This is done in order to keep the religion from those who are not yet prepared to accept the teachings and therefore could misunderstand it, as well as to protect the community when it is in danger. Some claim to be Muslim or Christian in order to avoid persecution; some do not.[200] Druze in different states can have radically different lifestyles.[201]

Theophany

Hamza ibn Ali ibn Ahmad is considered the founder of the Druze and the primary author of the Druze manuscripts.[5] He proclaimed that God had become human and taken the form of man.[202][203][204] Al-Hakim bi-Amr Allah is an important figure in the Druze faith whose eponymous founder ad-Darazi proclaimed him as the incarnation of God in 1018.[202][205] The Druze believe that al-Hākim will return at the end of times to judge the world and establish his kingdom, while Hamza ibn Ali is considered a reincarnation of Jesus, the Universal Mind 'Aql, closely associated with al-Hākim.[41]

The author of the epistle "The Report of the Jewish and Christians" (Khabar al-Yahud wal Nasara), part of first volume of the Epistles of Wisdom, appears to have been a

Druze individual. The account itself identifies him as Hamza ibn Ali, a supporter of al-Hakim's divinity and the founder of the Druze faith.[206]

Historian David R. W. Bryer defines the Druzes as ghulat of Isma'ilism, since they exaggerated the cult of the caliph al-Hakim bi-Amr Allah and considered him divine; he also defines the Druzes as a religion that deviated from Islam.[207] He also added that as a result of this deviation, the Druze faith "seems as different from Islam as Islam is from Christianity or Christianity is from Judaism".[208]

Prophethood

Recognition of prophets in the Druze religion is divided into three sort-of subcategories, the prophet themselves (natiq), their disciples (asas), and witnesses to their message (hujjah).

The number 5 contains an unstated significance within the Druze faith; it is believed in this area that great prophets come in groups of five. In the time of the ancient Greeks, these five were represented by Pythagoras, Plato, Aristotle, Parmenides, and Empedocles. In the first century, the five were represented by Jesus Christ,[209][210] John the Baptist,[211] Saint Matthew, Saint Mark, and Saint Luke.[53] In the time of the faith's foundation, the five were Hamza ibn Ali ibn Ahmad, Muḥammad ibn Wahb al-Qurashī, Abū'l-Khayr Salama ibn Abd al-Wahhab al-Samurri, Ismāʿīl ibn Muḥammad at-Tamīmī, and Al-Muqtana Baha'uddin.

Druze tradition honors and reveres Hamza ibn Ali Ahmad and Salman the Persian as "mentors" and "prophets", believed to be reincarnations of the monotheistic idea.[212][51]

Other beliefs

The Druze allow divorce, although it is discouraged, and circumcision is not necessary. Apostasy is forbidden,[213] and they usually have religious services on Thursday evenings.[36] Druze follow Sunni Hanafi law on issues which their own faith has no particular rulings about.[214][215]

Formal Druze worship is confined to weekly meeting on Thursday evenings, during which all members of community gather together to discuss local issues before those not initiated into the secrets of the faith (the juhhāl, or the ignorant) are dismissed, and those who are "uqqāl" or "enlightened" (those few initiated in the Druze holy books) remain to read and study.[36]

Religious symbol

The Druze strictly avoid iconography, but use five colors ("Five Limits" خمس حدود khams ḥudūd) as a religious symbol:[216][217] green, red, yellow, blue, and white. The five limits were listed by Ismail at-Tamimi (d. 1030) in the Epistle of the Candle (risālat aš-šamʿa) as:

First limit: Hamza ibn Ali (حمزة إبن علي إبن أحمد) (or Jesus according to other sources)[218]
Second limit: Ismail ibn Muhamed ibn Hamed at-Tamimi (Ismail at-Tamimi) (إسماعيل إبن محمد بن حامد التميمي)
Third limit: Muhamed ibn Wahb (محمد إبن وهب)
Fourth limit (as-Sabiq the anterior): Salama ibn abd al-Wahhab (سلامة إبن عبد الوهاب)
Fifth limit (al-Ilahiq the posterior): Ali ibn Ahmed as-Samouqi (علي إبن أحمد السموقي)
Each of the colors representing the five limits pertains to a metaphysical power called ḥadd, literally "a limit", as in the distinctions that separate humans from animals, or the powers that make humans the animalistic body. Each ḥadd is color-coded in the following manner:

Green for ʻAql "the Universal Mind/Intelligence/Nous",
Red for Nafs "the Universal Soul/Anima mundi",
Yellow for Kalima "the Word/Logos",
Blue for Sābiq (السابق) "the anterior/potentiality/cause/precedent", the first intellect.
White for al-Ilahiq (اللاحق) "the posterior/future/effect/Immanence".
The mind generates qualia and gives consciousness.[219] The soul embodies the mind and is responsible for transmigration and the character of oneself. The word, which is the atom of language, communicates qualia between humans and represents the platonic forms in the sensible world. The Sābiq and Tālī is the ability to perceive and learn from the past and plan for the future and predict it.

The colors can be arranged in vertically descending stripes (as a flag), or a five-pointed star.[220] The stripes are a diagrammatic cut of the spheres in neoplatonic philosophy, while the five-pointed star embodies the golden ratio, phi, as a symbol of temperance and a life of moderation.

Prayer houses and holy places

Holy places of the Druze are archaeological sites important to the community and associated with religious holidays;[221] the most notable example being Nabi Shu'ayb, dedicated to Jethro, who is a central figure of the Druze religion. Druze make pilgrimages to this site on the holiday of Ziyarat al-Nabi Shu'ayb.[222]

One of the most important features of the Druze village having a central role in social life is the khilwa or khalwa—a house of prayer, retreat and religious unity. The khalwat may be known as majlis in local languages.[223]

The second type of religious shrine is one associated with the anniversary of a historic event or death of a prophet. If it is a mausoleum the Druze call it mazār and if it is a shrine they call it maqām. The holy places become more important to the community in times of adversity and calamity. The holy places and shrines of the Druze are scattered in various villages, in places where they are protected and cared for. They are found in Syria, Lebanon and Israel.[221]

Initiates and "ignorant" members

Druze sheikh (ʻuqqāl) wearing religious dress
The Druze do not recognize any religious hierarchy.[224] As such, there is no "Druze clergy". Those few initiated in the Druze holy books are called عقال ʻuqqāl ("the wise"),[225] while the regular members of the group are called جهال juhhāl ("the ignorant").[226] Some find this classification disparaging however, and as such, terms like روحاني rūḥāniyy, meaning "(concerned with the) spiritual", and جسماني jismāniyy, meaning "(concerned with the) physical", are also used.

Given the strict religious, intellectual and spiritual requirements, most of the Druze are not initiated and might be referred to as al-Juhhāl (جهال), literally "the Ignorant", but in practice referring to the non-initiated Druze.[227] However, that term is seldom used by the Druze. Those Druze are not granted access to the Druze holy literature or allowed to attend the initiated religious meetings of the ʻuqqāl. The "juhhāl" are the vast majority of the Druze community.[224] The cohesiveness and frequent inter-community social interaction, however, enables most Druze to have an idea about their broad ethical requirements and have some sense of what their theology consists of (albeit often flawed).

The initiated religious group, which includes both men and women (less than 10% of the population), is called al-ʻUqqāl (عقال "the Knowledgeable Initiates"). They might or might not dress differently, although most wear a costume that was characteristic of mountain people in previous centuries. Women can opt to wear al-mandīl, a loose white veil, especially in the presence of other people. They wear al-mandīl on their heads to cover their hair and wrap it around their mouths. They wear black shirts and long skirts covering their legs to their ankles. Male ʻuqqāl often grow mustaches, and wear dark Levantine-Turkish traditional dresses, called the shirwal, with white turbans that vary according to the seniority of the ʻuqqāl. Traditionally the Druze women have played an important role both socially and religiously inside the community.[224]

Al-ʻuqqāl have equal rights to al-Juhhāl, but establish a hierarchy of respect based on religious service. The most influential of al-ʻuqqāl become Ajawīd, recognized religious leaders, and from this group the spiritual leaders of the Druze are assigned. While the Shaykh al-ʻAql, which is an official position in Syria, Lebanon, and Israel, is elected by the local community and serves as the head of the Druze religious council, judges from the Druze religious courts are usually elected for this position. Unlike the spiritual leaders, the authority of the Shaykh al-ʻAql is limited to the country he is elected in, though in some instances spiritual leaders are elected to this position.[228]

The Druze believe in the unity of God, and are often known as the "People of Monotheism" or simply "Monotheists".[229] Their theology has a Neo-Platonic view about how God interacts with the world through emanations and is similar to some gnostic and other esoteric sects. Druze philosophy also shows Sufi influences.[230]

Druze principles focus on honesty, loyalty, filial piety, altruism, patriotic sacrifice, and monotheism.[231] They reject nicotine, alcohol, and other drugs and often, the consumption of pork (to the Uqqāl and not necessarily to the Juhhāl).[232] Druze reject polygamy, believe in reincarnation, and are not obliged to observe most of the religious rituals.[233] The Druze believe that rituals are symbolic and have an individualistic effect on the person, for which reason Druze are free to perform them, or not. The community does celebrate Eid al-Adha, however, considered their most significant holiday; though their form of observance is different compared to that of most Muslims.[234]

Culture

A Druze woman preparing a traditional dish

The Druze community maintains Arabic language and culture as core elements of their identity.[18][31][33] Arabic is their primary language, and Druze cultural practices and traditions are deeply intertwined with the broader Arab heritage.[79][235] While the Druze have their unique religious beliefs and customs, they actively preserve and contribute to Arabic cultural and social life in the Levant.[31] They have had a significant impact on the region's history and culture and continue to play a notable political role.[55]

Traditionally, most Druze are not initiated into the deeper secrets of the faith and are considered "juhhāl", or "the ignorant". Only a minority, known as the "uqqāl" or "enlightened", are initiated into the Druze holy books and engage in religious study. The religious life of the average Druze ("juhhāl") revolves around a very small number of events—birth and circumcision, engagement and marriage, death and burial—and is devoid of special Druze prayers or worship.[236] Marriage outside the Druze faith is forbidden,[81] and if a Druze marries a non-Druze, the Druze may be ostracized and marginalized by their community.[237] Because a non-Druze partner cannot convert to Druze faith, the couple cannot have Druze children, because the Druze faith can only be passed on through birth to two Druze parents.[13]

Circumcision is widely practiced by the Druze.[238] The procedure is practiced as a cultural tradition, and has no religious significance in the Druze faith.[239] There is no special date for this act in the Druze faith: male Druze infants are usually circumcised shortly after birth,[236] however some remain uncircumcised until the age of ten or older.[236] Some Druze do not circumcise their male children, and refuse to observe this "common Muslim practice".[240]

Druze communities are often close-knit and maintain a strong sense of identity and solidarity. A key aspect of their religious practice includes ziyarat, or visits to holy places. One of the most significant events in Druze religious life is the annual pilgrimage to the Shrine of Shu'ayb, observed between 25 and 28 April.[241] This pilgrimage is dedicated to Shu'ayb, whom Druze believe to be a prophet and whose purported tomb is located at this shrine. This event is so important that it is officially recognized as a public holiday in Israel.[241]

Language

The mother tongue of Druze in Syria, Lebanon and Israel is Levantine Arabic,[235] except those born and living in the Druze diaspora such as Venezuela, where Arabic was not taught or spoken at home.[235] The Druze Arabic dialect, especially in the rural areas, is often different from the other regional Arabic dialects.[235] Druze Arabic dialect is distinguished from others by retention of the phoneme /q/,[235] the use of which by Druze is particularly prominent in the mountains and less so in urban areas.

The Druze citizens of Israel are Arabic in language and culture,[18] and linguistically speaking, the majority of them are fluently bilingual, speaking both a Central Northern Levantine Arabic dialect and Hebrew. In Druze Arab homes and towns in Israel, the primary language spoken is Arabic, while some Hebrew words have entered the colloquial Arabic dialect.[242] They often use Hebrew characters to write their Arabic dialect online.[243]

Cultural identity

Inside the Maqam Baha al-Din in Beit Jann

Various scholars agree that the Druze community's cultural identity is deeply intertwined with their Arab heritage. Historian Nejla Abu-Izzedin and Kamal Salibi both argue that the Druze are profoundly embedded within the Arab cultural framework, as demonstrated by their common language and social customs.[244][245] They assert that this integration is apparent through the Druze's active participation in regional traditions and their assimilation into Arab society, despite their distinct religious and philosophical beliefs.[246][247]

Scholar Robert Brenton Betts explains that the Druze social structure is characterized by a strong sense of community and the leadership of religious elders known as 'sheikhs'. These leaders are pivotal in guiding both the spiritual and social aspects of Druze life, which is crucial for preserving their unique identity.[248] Betts also points to specific Druze practices, such as the annual pilgrimage to the Shrine of Shu'ayb, as examples of how these traditions, along with the role of the sheikhs, are deeply ingrained in Druze social life. He argues that these practices are not just religious rituals but are fundamental to reinforcing Druze unity and continuity.[249]

According to some scholars, the Druze cultural identity is shaped by their interactions with both Christian and Muslim communities, reflecting a synthesis of religious and cultural influences. Historians notes that the Druze have historically maintained a positive relationship with Christians, as evidenced by shared traditions and social practices in Mount Lebanon.[250][251] This interaction has led to overlapping symbols, customs, mutual veneration of saints and their shrines, and shared terminology for God.[252][253] Sites such as the Church of Saidet et Tallé in Deir el Qamar, historically a popular Marian pilgrimage site among the Druze, exemplify this cultural exchange.[254] The Druze also venerate Christian saints like Saint George and the Prophet Elijah, admired for their "bravery and warrior-like qualities".[252] Scholar Pierre-Yves Beaurepaire observes that these warrior saints resonate with the Druze due to their parallels with Druze militarized traditions.[252] The baptism of children, in line with Christian tradition, was common among prominent Lebanese Druze families. Historian Aharon Layish notes that there is clear evidence of Druzes in Lebanon during the Ottoman period who posed as Christians for practical reasons.[255]

Conversely, despite sharing historical roots with Muslims, the Druze often experience a more complex relationship with Muslim communities due to their distinct religious beliefs and practices.[251] Historically, the Druze faced significant persecution from Muslim regimes, which led them to keep their religious beliefs secret.[256][257][258] According to Druze narrative, these acts of persecution were aimed at eradicating the entire community.[259][page needed] This narrative has shaped the Druze sense of identity and their awareness of survival.[259][page needed] As a survival strategy, some Druze have historically posed as Muslims, a practice known as taqiya.[260] This concealment has led to a synthesis of Druze religious practice and cultural identity with Islamic elements, as noted by scholars.[261]

Cuisine

Druze cuisine is Arab cuisine,[262] and shares many similarities with other Levantine cuisines. It features a rich array of grains, meat, potato, cheese, bread, whole grains, fruits, vegetables, fresh fish and tomatoes. A hallmark of Druze and Levantine cuisine is meze including tabbouleh, hummus and baba ghanoush. Kibbeh nayyeh is also a popular mezze among the Druze. Other well-known dishes among Druzes include falafel, sfiha, shawarma, dolma, kibbeh, kusa mahshi, shishbarak, muhammara, and mujaddara. Among the popular traditional Arabic dessert by the Druze is Knafeh.[263] In Israel, the Saj bread is known as "Druze Pita" as it was easier for Israeli Jews to identify with Druze than with Arabs.[264] It is a pita filled with labneh (thick yoghurt) and topped with olive oil and za'atar,[265] and a very popular bread in Israel.[266] Al-Meleh a popular dish among Druze in Hauran region (Suwayda Governorate), cooked in a pressure cooker and served on huge special plates at weddings, holidays, and other special occasions. And consists of bulgur wheat immersed in ghee with lamb and yogurt, and served hot with fried kibbeh and vegetables.[267]

For reasons that remain unclear, the Mulukhiyah dish was banned by the Fatimid Caliph Al-Hakim bi-Amr Allah sometime during his reign (996–1021). While the ban was eventually lifted after the end of his reign, the Druze, who hold Al-Hakim in high regard and give him quasi-divine authority,[204] continue to respect the ban, and do not eat Mulukhiyah of any kind to this day.[268]

Mate (in Levantine Arabic, متة /mæte/) is a popular drink consumed by the Druze brought to the Levant by Syrian migrants from Argentina in the 19th century.[269] Mate is made by steeping dried leaves of the South American yerba mate plant in hot water and is served with a metal straw (بمبيجة bambīja or مصاصة maṣṣāṣah) from a gourd (فنجان finjān or قَرْعَة qar‘ah). Mate is often the first item served when entering a Druze home. It is a social drink and can be shared between multiple participants. After each drinker, the metal straw is cleaned with lemon rind. Traditional snacks eaten with mate include raisins, nuts, dried figs, biscuits, and chips.[270][269]

Marriage

The Druze rejection of polygamy, in contrast to Islamic tradition, reflects a significant influence from Christianity on their faith.[41] While the Druze cite certain Quranic verses to justify their position, it more closely mirrors the Christian perspective on marriage.[233] Additionally, the practice of monasticism by some Druze sheikhs is highly regarded within their community. It's not uncommon for a sheikh to request celibacy from his fiancée, and many Druze sheikhs remain unmarried throughout their lives.[271] In Druze belief, sex is seen not as an end in itself but as a means of reproduction, with certain sexual forms considered sinful.[271]

The Druze doctrine does not permit outsiders to convert to their religion, as only one who is born to Druze parents can be considered a Druze. Marriage outside the Druze faith is uncommon and strongly discouraged for both males and females. If a Druze individual, whether male or female, marries a non-Druze, they may face ostracism and marginalization from their community.[35] Since a non-Druze partner cannot convert to the Druze faith, the couple cannot have Druze children, as the Druze faith can only be inherited from two Druze parents at birth.[272] Marrying a non-Druze, whether male or female, is viewed as apostasy from the Druze religion.[213] The Druze community holds a negative perception of apostates who marry outside the religion. Consequently, those who leave the Druze religion due to interfaith marriage are forced to leave their village and are exiled to distant, non-Druze areas. This religious and social pressure leads to their isolation and classification as outcasts within their Druze community.[213]

Druze and other religions

Relationship with Muslims

The Druze faith is often classified as a branch of Isma'ilism; although according to various scholars Druze faith "diverges substantially from Islam, both Sunni and Shia".[273][274] Even though the faith originally developed out of Ismaili Islam, most Druze do not identify as Muslims,[275][30][276][277][278][279] and they do not accept the five pillars of Islam.[29] Historian David R. W. Bryer defines the Druzes as ghulat of Isma'ilism, since they exaggerated the cult of the caliph al-Hakim bi-Amr Allah and considered him divine; he also defines the Druzes as a religion that deviated from Islam.[207] He also added that as a result of this deviation, the Druze faith "seems as different from Islam as Islam is from Christianity or Christianity is from Judaism".[208]

Historically the relationship between the Druze and Muslims has been characterized by intense persecution.[280][256][257][258] The Druze have frequently experienced persecution by different Muslim regimes such as the Ismaili Fatimid Caliphate,[68][100] Sunni Mamluk Sultanate,[109] Sunni Ottoman Empire,[281][119] and Egypt Eyalet.[282][283] The persecution of the Druze included massacres, demolishing Druze prayer houses and holy places, and forced conversion to Islam.[284] Those acts of persecution were meant to eradicate the whole community according to the Druze narrative.[259][page needed] Most recently, the Syrian Civil War, which began in 2011, saw persecution of the Druze at the hands of Islamic extremists.[285][286]

Since Druze emerged from Islam and share certain beliefs with Islam, its position of whether it is a separate religion or a sect of Islam is sometimes controversial among Muslim scholars.[287] Druze are not considered Muslims by those belonging to orthodox Islamic schools of thought.[288][289][290][291][292] Ibn Taymiyya, a prominent Muslim scholar muhaddith, dismissed the Druze as non-Muslims,[293] and his fatwa cited that Druze: "Are not at the level of ʾAhl al-Kitāb (People of the Book) nor mushrikin (polytheists). Rather, they are from the most deviant kuffār (Infidel) ... Their women can be taken as slaves and their property can be seized ... they are to be killed whenever they are found and cursed as they described ... It is obligatory to kill their scholars and religious figures so that they do not misguide others",[110] which in that setting would have legitimized violence against them as apostates.[294][295] The Ottoman Empire often relied on Ibn Taymiyya's religious ruling to justify their persecution of Druze.[296] In contrast, according to Ibn Abidin, whose work Radd al-Muhtar 'ala al-Durr al-Mukhtar is still considered the authoritative text of Hanafi fiqh today,[297] the Druze are neither Muslims nor apostates.[298]

In 1959, in an ecumenical move driven by Egyptian president Gamal Abdel Nasser's effort to broaden his political appeal after the establishment of the United Arab Republic between Egypt and Syria in 1958,[299] the Islamic scholar Mahmud Shaltut at Al Azhar University in Cairo classified the Druze as Muslims,[300] even though most Druze no longer consider themselves Muslim.[301][302] The fatwa declares that the Druze are Muslims because they recite the twofold Shahada, and believe in the Qur'an and monotheism and do not oppose Islam in word or deed.[303] This fatwa was not accepted by all in the Islamic world, many dissenting scholars have argued the Druze recite the Shahada as a form of taqiya; a precautionary dissimulation or denial of religious belief and practice in the face of persecution. Some sects of Islam, including all Shia denominations, don't recognize the religious authority of Al Azhar University, those that do sometimes challenge the religious legitimacy of Shaltut's fatwa because it was issued for political reasons, as Gamal Abdel Nasser saw it as a tool to spread his appeal and influence across the entire Arab world.[304][261]

In 2012, due to a drift towards Salafism in Al-Azhar, and the ascension of the Muslim Brotherhood into Egyptian political leadership, the dean of the Faculty of Islamic Studies at Al-Azhar issued a fatwa strongly opposed to the 1959 fatwa.[305]

Both religions venerate Shuaib and Muhammad: Shuaib (Jethro) is revered as the chief prophet in the Druze religion,[306] and in Islam he is considered a prophet of God. Muslims regard Muhammad as the final and paramount prophet sent by God,[307][full citation needed][308] to the Druze, Muhammad is exalted as one of the seven prophets sent by God in different periods of history.[209][210][39]

In terms of religious comparison, Islamic schools and branches do not believe in reincarnation,[48] a paramount tenet of the Druze faith.[191] Islam teaches dawah, whereas the Druze do not accept converts to their faith. Marriage outside the Druze faith is rare and is strongly discouraged. Islamic schools and branches allow for divorce and permit men to be married to multiple women, contrary to the views of the Druze in monogamous marriage and not allowing divorce. Differences between Islamic schools and branches and Druze include their belief in the theophany,[48] Hamza ibn Ali ibn Ahmad is considered the founder of the Druze and the primary author of the Druze manuscripts;[5] he proclaimed that God had become human and taken the form of man, Al-Hakim bi-Amr Allah.[202][203][204] Within Islam, however, such a concept of theophany is a denial of monotheism.

The Druze faith incorporates some elements of Islam,[39][40] and other religious beliefs. Druze Sacred texts include the Qur'an and the Epistles of Wisdom (rasail al-hikma رسائل الحكمة)[189] The Druze community does celebrate Eid al-Adha as their most significant holiday; though their form of observance is different compared to that of most Muslims.[234] The Druze faith does not follow Sharia nor any of the Five Pillars of Islam save reciting the Shahada.[260] Scholars argue that Druze recite the Shahada in order to protect their religion and their own safety, and to avoid persecution by Muslims.[260]

Relationship with Christians

Main article: Christianity and Druze

Christian Church and Druze Khalwa in Shuf: Historically; the Druzes and the Christians in the Shuf Mountains lived in complete harmony.[126]

Christianity and Druze are Abrahamic religions that share a historical traditional connection with some major theological differences. The two faiths share a common place of origin in the Middle East and are both monotheistic. The relationship between Druze and Christians has been characterized largely by harmony and peaceful coexistence.[125][126] Amicable relations between the two groups prevailed throughout most of history, though a few exceptions exist, including the 1860 civil conflict in Mount Lebanon and Damascus.[127][page needed][128] Conversion of Druze to Christianity used to be common practice in the Levant region.[309][237] Over the centuries, several prominent members of the Druze community have embraced Christianity,[310][185][186][311] including some of Shihab dynasty members,[312] as well as the Abi-Lamma clan.[313][314]

Christian and Druze communities share a long history of interaction dating back roughly a millennium, particularly in Mount Lebanon.[251] Interaction between Christian communities (members of the Maronites, Eastern Orthodox, Melkite, and other churches) and the Unitarian Druze led to the presence of mixed villages and towns in Mount Lebanon, Chouf,[126] Wadi al-Taym,[98] Jabal al-Druze,[315] the Galilee region, Mount Carmel, and Golan Heights.[316] The Maronite Catholic and the Druze founded modern Lebanon in the early Eighteenth Century, through a governing and social system known as the "Maronite-Druze dualism" in the Mount Lebanon Mutasarrifate.[139]

Druze doctrine teaches that Christianity is to be "esteemed and praised" as the Gospel writers are regarded as "carriers of wisdom".[317] The Druze faith incorporates some elements of Christianity,[39][40] in addition to adoption of Christian elements on the Epistles of Wisdom.[318][41] The full Druze canon or Druze scripture (Epistles of Wisdom) includes the Old Testament,[319] the New Testament,[319] the Quran and philosophical works by Plato and those influenced by Socrates among works from other religions and philosophers.[319] The Druze faith shows influence of Christian monasticism, among other religious practices.[230][41] Some scholars suggest that early Christian Gnostic beliefs might have influenced Druze theology, particularly in concepts of divine knowledge and reincarnation.[41] These influences and incorporations of Christian elements encompass the adoption of the concept of Christianizing al-Mahdi's persona among the Druze, as well as the integration of verses from the Bible concerning the Messiah by certain Druze founders.[41]

In terms of religious comparison, mainstream Christian denominations do not believe in reincarnation or the transmigration of the soul, unlike the Druze.[48] Evangelism is widely seen as central to the Christian faith, unlike the Druze who do not accept converts. Marriage outside the Druze faith is rare and is strongly discouraged. Similarities between the Druze and Christians include commonalities in their view of monogamous marriage, as well as the forbidding of divorce and remarriage,[48] in addition to the belief in the oneness of God and theophany.[320]

Neither mainstream Christian denominations nor Druze require male circumcision,[321][239] though male circumcision is commonly practiced in many predominantly Christian countries and many Christian communities,[322] and it is practiced in Coptic Christianity, the Ethiopian Orthodox Church, and the Eritrean Orthodox Tewahedo Church as a rite of passage.[323][324][325][326][327] Male circumcision is also widely practiced by the Druze,[238] but as a cultural tradition, since circumcision has no religious significance in the Druze faith.[239]

The Druze Maqam Al-Masih (Jesus) in Suwayda Governorate: Both religions revere Jesus.[209]

Both faiths give a prominent place to Jesus:[209][210] In Christianity, Jesus is the central figure, seen as the messiah. To the Druze, Jesus is an important prophet of God,[209][210] being among the seven prophets (including Muhammad) who appeared in different periods of history.[328] The Druze revere Jesus "the son of Joseph and Mary" and his four disciples, who wrote the Gospels.[329] According to the Druze manuscripts Jesus is the Greatest Imam and the incarnation of Ultimate Reason (Akl) on earth and the first cosmic principle (Hadd),[329][218] and regards Jesus and Hamza ibn Ali as the incarnations of one of the five great celestial powers, who form part of their system.[330] In the Druze tradition, Jesus is known under three titles: the True Messiah (al-Masih al-Haq), the Messiah of all Nations (Masih al-Umam), and the Messiah of Sinners. This is due, respectively, to the belief that Jesus delivered the true Gospel message, the belief that he was the Saviour of all nations, and the belief that he offers forgiveness.[331]

Both religions venerate the Virgin Mary,[332] John the Baptist,[211][333] Saint George,[334] Elijah,[211] Luke the Evangelist,[53] Job and other common figures.[53] Figures in the Old Testament such as Adam, Noah, Abraham, Moses, and Jethro are considered important prophets of God in the Druze faith, being among the seven prophets who appeared in different periods of history.[209][210]

Relationship with Jews

Maqam Al-Khidr in Kafr Yasif

The relationship between the Druze and Jews has been controversial,[335] Antisemitic material is contained in the Druze literature such as the Epistles of Wisdom; for example in an epistle ascribed to one of the founders of Druze, Baha al-Din al-Muqtana,[336] probably written sometime between AD 1027 and AD 1042, accused the Jews of crucifying Jesus.[337] In other epistles, Jews are depicted negatively as "morally corrupt and murderers of prophets", particularly in chapters 13–14 of the Epistles of Wisdom.[338] The epistle "Excuses and Warnings" predicts that, as a sign of the end times, Jews will seize control of Jerusalem and seek revenge on its inhabitants as well as those of Acre. Afterwards, Messiah Jesus will expel the Jews from Jerusalem due to their spread of moral corruption worldwide. Christians will then dominate Muslims until the Day of Judgment, when divine judgment by Al-Hakim bi-Amr Allah will occur.[338][339]

On the other hand, Benjamin of Tudela, a Jewish traveler[340][better source needed] from the 12th century, pointed out that the Druze maintained good commercial relations with the Jews nearby, and according to him this was because the Druze liked the Jewish people.[341] Yet, the Jews and Druze lived isolated from each other, except in a few mixed towns such as Deir al-Qamar and Peki'in.[341][342] The Deir el Qamar Synagogue was built in 1638, during the Ottoman era in Lebanon, to serve the local Jewish population, some of whom were part of the immediate entourage of the Druze Emir Fakhr-al-Din II.[citation needed]

During the Ottoman period, relations between the Druze of Galilee and the Jewish community were generally strained and marked by conflict.[343] In 1660, during a Druze power struggle in Mount Lebanon, Druze forces destroyed Jewish settlements in the Galilee, including Safad and Tiberias.[344][345] The tension escalated in 1834 during the Peasants' Revolt, when Safed's Jewish community endured a month-long assault that involved extensive looting, violence, and the destruction of Jewish properties by both Druze and Muslims.[346] During the Druze revolt against the rule of Ibrahim Pasha of Egypt, the Jewish community in Safad was attacked by Druze rebels in early July 1838, the violence against the Jews included plundering their homes and desecrating their synagogues.[347][348][349]

Interactions between Jews and Druze were rare before the establishment of Israel in 1948, as they historically lived isolated from each other.[342][350] During the British Mandate for Palestine, the Druze did not embrace the rising Arab nationalism of the time or participate in violent confrontations with Jewish immigrants. In 1948, many Druze volunteered for the Israeli army and no Druze villages were destroyed or permanently abandoned.[351] Since the establishment of the state of Israel, the Druze have demonstrated solidarity with Israel and distanced themselves from Arab Islamic radicalism.[352] Israeli Druze male citizens serve in the Israel Defense Forces.[353] The Jewish-Druze partnership was often referred as "a covenant of blood" (Hebrew: ברית דמים, brit damim) in recognition of the common military yoke carried by the two peoples for the security of the country.[354][337][355] Israeli Druze scholars Kais M. Firro and Rabah Halabi contend that the Israeli narrative of a "special historical bond" or "blood pact" between Druze and Jews is a myth fabricated by early Zionist circles to divide and control Arab religious communities in Israel, with no historical foundation.[65][66] Conversely, the Druze community in Syria, Lebanon, and the Golan Heights generally aligns with Arab nationalism and holds predominantly anti-Zionist views.[356]

From 1957, the Israeli government formally recognized the Druze as a separate religious community,[357] and they are defined as a distinct ethnic group in the Israeli Ministry of Interior's census registration.[357] Israeli Druze do not consider themselves Muslim, and see their faith as a separate and independent religion.[357] While compared to other Israeli Christians and Muslims, Druze place less emphasis on their Arab identity and self-identify more as Israeli. However, they were less ready for personal relationships with Jews compared to Israeli Muslims and Christians.[358] Scholars attribute this trend to cultural differences between Jews and Druze.[359]

In terms of religious comparison, scholars consider Judaism and the Druze faith as ethnoreligious groups,[26] both practicing endogamy,[25] and both typically do not proselytize. Belief in reincarnation (Gilgul) exist in some strands of Judaism influenced by the Kabbalah, such as Hasidic Judaism, but is rejected by mainstream Jewish denominations (Reform Judaism, Conservative Judaism and Orthodox Judaism).[360] Figures in the Hebrew Bible such as Adam, Noah, Abraham, and Moses are considered important prophets of God in the Druze faith, being among the seven prophets who appeared in different periods of history.[209][210] Both religions venerate Elijah,[211] Job and other common figures. In the Hebrew Bible, Jethro was Moses' father-in-law, a Kenite shepherd and priest of Midian.[361] Jethro of Midian is considered an ancestor of the Druze who revere him as their spiritual founder and chief prophet.

Origins

Ethnic origins

A Druze family of the Lebanon, late 1800s

A study carried out by the Israeli Druze historian Kais M. Firro examines various theories about the origins of the Druze, including possible connections to the Arameans, Arabs, Itureans, Cuthites, Hivites, Armenians, Persians, and Turks. Some suggested a European origin.[362] In the 17th century, there was a prevailing belief in France that the Druze were descendants of a lost army of European Christian crusaders.[363] According to this notion, after the fall of the Christian stronghold of Acre in 1291 and the subsequent persecution by the victorious Mamluks, these crusaders sought refuge in the mountains of Lebanon and settled there permanently.[363]

According to Firro, two main approaches have been used to trace Druze origins. The first examines religious texts and the ethnic backgrounds of the early Druze leaders. The second focuses on the migration and settlement patterns of ancient peoples and tribes in the Druze regions before the 11th century. The third approach relies on anthropometric studies.[362]

The main proponent of the first approach is historian Philip Hitti, whose theory is a key reference for tracing Druze origins.[364] Hitti proposed that the Druze are a blend of Persians, Iraqis, and Persianized Arabs who adopted new beliefs. He supported this with three arguments: first, the early founders and disseminators of the Druze religion were of Persians origin; second, some of the Druze religious lexicon is Persian; and third, the native inhabitants of Wadi al-Taym where Druze faith beliefs first spread, were influenced by Persian and Iraqi or Persianized Arab cultures before 1077.[364] However, Martin Sprengling criticized Hitti's theory, arguing that not all early Druze leaders were of Persian origin—citing Baha al-Din al-Muqtana as an example of Arab origin. Sprengling also noted that Wadi al-Taym's inhabitants before 1077 were mostly pure Arab tribes such as the Tanukhids and Taym Allah tribe.[364] He concluded that the Druze are mainly a combination of various ethnic groups, with a major influence from Arabs, particularly southern Arabs, along with an indigenous mountain population of Aramaic origin.[60][365] Additionally, Two English researchers, Gertrude Bell and David Hogarth, also proposed that the Druze are a blend of Arabs from Southern Arabia and the mountain-dwelling Aramaeans.[61]

The second approach, used by Druze historians, scholars, intellectuals and clerics, emphasizes the migration and settlement of Arab tribes to highlight the pure Arab lineage of those who adopted Druze beliefs in the 11th century.[60] Proponents argue that the Druze speak a "pure Arab dialect" and are of "pure Arab blood", not mixed with Turkish or other influences, due to their practice of strict endogamy marriage.[60] This view maintains that most Druze are descended from 12 Arab tribes that migrated to Syria before the Islamic period.[60] It relies on historical records, Druze chronicles, and genealogical trees reconstructed by Druze families to trace their ancestry and settlement in Syria.[60] According to Firro, all Druze historians, scholars and leaders in Lebanon and Syria consider the Druze to be Arabs, and this view is accepted by the entire Druze community in those countries.[67] In contrast, while most Druze in Israel consider themselves Arabs, some Israeli Druze politicians have begun to reject the idea of Arabic racial origin as a component of Druze national identity for political reasons.[67]

According to Firro, the third approach in the research on Druze origins is based on the conclusions of researchers and anthropologists. Studies by Felix von Luschan, Arries and Kappers found that Druze in the Levant, along with their Muslim and Christian counterparts, share the same origins.[60] Similarly, Druze historian Nejla Abu-Izzedin has concluded that Druze, Christians, and Muslims in the Levant have the same racial background.[60]

According to Druze historian Amin Talea', Druze oral and written traditions recount that twelve Arab tribes converted to Islam and fought alongside Muslim warriors until they were introduced to the Druze religion by preachers sent from Egypt by the Fatimid caliph Al-Hakim bi-Amr Allah. Talea' adds that, over time, the Druze developed a strong sense of their pure Arab origins, believing that, apart from their unique religious practices, their spiritual and material culture closely mirrored that of the broader population of Greater Syria.[366]

a Tanukh clan, holding a significant place in Druze history.[367]
The Druze faith extended to many areas in the Middle East, but most of the modern Druze can trace their origin to the Wadi al-Taym in Southern Lebanon, which is named after an Arab tribe Taym Allah (or Taym Allat) which, according to Islamic historian al-Tabari, first came from the Arabian Peninsula into the valley of the Euphrates where they had been Christianized prior to their migration into Lebanon. Many of the Druze feudal families, whose genealogies have been preserved by the two modern Syrian chroniclers Haydar al-Shihabi and Ahmad Faris al-Shidyaq, seem also to point in the direction of this origin. Arabian tribes emigrated via the Persian Gulf and stopped in Iraq on their route that would later to lead them to Syria. The first feudal Druze family, the Tanukhids, which made for itself a name in fighting the Crusaders was, according to Haydar al-Shihabi, an Arab tribe from Mesopotamia where it occupied the position of a ruling family and apparently was Christianized.[109][page needed]

Travelers like Niebuhr, and scholars like Max von Oppenheim, undoubtedly echoing the popular Druze belief regarding their own origin, have classified them as Arabs.[61]

The Arabian hypothesis is widely regarded as the leading explanation for the origins of the Druze people among historians, scholars, intellectuals, and religious leaders within the Druze community.[32] This theory suggests that the Druze descended from twelve Arab tribes that migrated to Syria before and during the early Islamic period.[60][61][62] It also serves as the primary framework for understanding their historical and racial origins, as reflected in their oral traditions and written literature. This hypothesis is central to the Druze's self-perception and cultural identity.[31] This view is accepted by the entire Druze community in Syria and Lebanon, as well as by most Druze in Israel.[67] The Arabic language is spoken by the Druze and is also the language in which their sacred texts are written. Scholars who hold this view argue that this linguistic connection underscores the Druze's ethnic Arab identity.

According to Druze historian Nejla Abu-Izzedin, the Druze people are of Arab origin, both culturally and historically.[31] She explains that Druze traditions and narratives consistently trace their roots to Arab tribes who settled in Syria, some prior to the advent of Islam and others during the Muslim conquest.[61] Abu-Izzedin further notes that when the Druze community was established, its members were spread across a wide area of Syria. The majority of those who embraced the Druze faith were Arab tribes from the northern region, making the Arab elements of the community predominant.[367] According to Abu-Izzedin, "ethnically", the "Wadi al-Taym has been authoritatively stated to be one of the most Arab regions of [geographical] Syria".[368] The area was one of the two most important centers of Druze missionary activity in the 11th century.[368]

Additionally, Abu-Izzedin highlights that the Tanukhids, an Arab tribe, hold a significant place in Druze history.[367] She asserts that the Druze claims of Arab origin were not driven by self-interest, as Arabs were no longer in a dominant position when the Druze community was founded in the 11th century.[369] Furthermore, Druze narratives recount their involvement in pivotal events in Arab history.[31] In modern times, the Druze have largely adopted Arab nationalism and played a notable role in the Great Syrian Revolt of 1920's.[31]

Druze scholar Sami Makarem notes that Wadi Taym and southern Lebanon (Jabal Amel) were pivotal centers for Druze missionary activity in the 11th century, inhabited by Arab tribes.[62] He explains that Druze oral traditions and religious documents suggest that most Druze ancestors came from twelve Arab tribes in Maarat al-Numan during the early period of Islam and its conquests. Later, they migrated and settled in Lebanon.[62] Makarem highlights the Druze's strong Arab heritage, noting that early Druze followers were predominantly of Arab descent.[62] He also points out that many tribes settling in the Levant before Islam came from southern Arabia, including Yamani and Qaysi tribes. According to Makarem, Druze belief links their ancestry to tribes that lived in [geographical] Syria, some before Islam and others arriving during the conquest.[62]

Israeli Druze historian Salman Hamud Fallah asserted that the Druze people of today originated from the Arabian Peninsula. He noted that some of their ancestors came from the northern part of the peninsula, while others came from the southern region, specifically Yemen.[370] In addition, Israeli Druze historian Yusri Hazran describes the Druze narrative, which holds that twelve Arab tribes migrated into the Syrian region either before the rise of Islam or during the early Islamic period. These tribes were predominantly of Yamani tribes, with the Tanukhids being the most dominant among them. Subsequently, these tribes adopted the Druze doctrine. Hazran affirms that this narrative is recognized within Druze doctrine and its scriptures.[371][372]

Druze researchers and historians from Israel, such as Kais M. Firro, Rabah Halabi, Munir Fakhr El-Din, and Afifa E. Kheir, confirm that the Druze are Arabs and note that this was not a contentious issue in Israel before 1962.[67][65][373] Halabi observes that Israeli policies aimed at granting the Druze a distinct community status and political identity led some Druze to see this separate "Druze-Israeli identity" as an ethnic marker for social integration within Israeli society.[66] Firro argues that efforts to create a separate Druze identity distinct from Arabs are politically motivated and lack historical basis, citing Druze religious and historical literature that affirms their Arab heritage.[374] Scholar Michael Cohen adds that, despite the Israeli and Zionist narrative promoting a distinct "Druze ethnic identity", most Druze in Israel view their origins as Arab and consider their Druze identity primarily as religious.[375]

Druze as a mixture of Western Asian tribes

The 1911 edition of Encyclopædia Britannica states that the Druze are "a mixture of refugee stocks, in which the Arab largely predominates, grafted on to an original mountain population of Aramaic blood".[70]

Iturean hypothesis

According to Jewish contemporary literature, the Druze, who were visited and described in 1165 by Benjamin of Tudela, were pictured as descendants of the Itureans,[376] an Ismaelite Arab tribe, which used to reside in the northern parts of the Golan plateau through Hellenistic and Roman periods. The word Druzes, in an early Hebrew edition of his travels, occurs as Dogziyin, but it is clear that this is a scribal error.

Archaeological assessments of the Druze region have also proposed the possibility of Druze descending from Itureans,[377] who had inhabited Mount Lebanon and Golan Heights in late classic antiquity, but their traces fade in the Middle Ages.

Genetics

See also: Genetic history of the Middle East

Lebanese Christians and Druze became a genetic isolate in the predominantly Islamic world.[378]

In a 2005 study of ASPM gene variants, Mekel-Bobrov et al. found that the Israeli Druze people of the Mount Carmel region have among the highest rate of the newly evolved ASPM- Haplogroup D, at 52.2% occurrence of the approximately 6,000-year-old allele.[379] While it is not yet known exactly what selective advantage is provided by this gene variant, the Haplogroup D allele is thought[by whom?] to be positively selected in populations and to confer some substantial advantage that has caused its frequency to rapidly increase.

A 2004 DNA study has shown that Israeli Druze are remarkable for the high frequency (35%) of males who carry the Y-chromosomal haplogroup L, which is otherwise uncommon in the Middle East (Shen et al. 2004).[380] This haplogroup originates from prehistoric South Asia and has spread from Pakistan into southern Iran. A 2008 study done on larger samples showed that L-M20 averages 27% in Mount Carmel Druze, 2% in Galilee Druze, 8% in Lebanese Druze, and it was not found in a sample of 59 Syrian Druze (Slush et al. 2008).[381]

Cruciani, in 2007, found E1b1b1a2 (E-V13) [a subclade of E1b1b1a (E-M78)] in high levels (>10% of the male population) in Cypriot and Druze lineages. Recent genetic clustering analyses of ethnic groups are consistent with the close ancestral relationship between the Druze and Cypriots, and also identified similarity to the general Syrian and Lebanese populations, as well as the major Jewish divisions (Ashkenazi, Sephardi, Iraqi, and Moroccan Jews) (Behar et al. 2010).[382]

Also, a new study concluded that the Druze harbor a remarkable diversity of mitochondrial DNA lineages that appear to have separated from each other thousands of years ago. But instead of dispersing throughout the world after their separation, the full range of lineages can still be found within the Druze population.[383]

The researchers noted that the Druze villages contained a striking range of high frequency and high diversity of the X haplogroup, suggesting that this population provides a glimpse into the past genetic landscape of the Near East at a time when the X haplogroup was more prevalent.[383]

These findings are consistent with the Druze oral tradition that claims that the adherents of the faith came from diverse ancestral lineages stretching back tens of thousands of years.[383] The Shroud of Turin analysis shows significant traces of mitochondrial DNA unique to the Druze community.[384]

A 2008 study published on the genetic background of Druze communities in Israel showed highly heterogeneous parental origins. A total of 311 Israeli Druze were sampled: 37 from the Golan Heights, 183 from the Galilee, and 35 from Mount Carmel, as well as 27 Druze immigrants from Syria and 29 from Lebanon (Slush et al. 2008). The researchers found the following frequencies of Y-chromosomal and MtDNA haplogroups:[381]

Mount Carmel: L 27%, R 27%, J 18%, E 15%, G 12%.
Galilee: J 31%, R 20%, E 18%, G 14%, K 11%, Q 4%, L 2%.
Golan Heights: J 54%, E 29%, I 8%, G 4%, C 4%.
Lebanon: J 58%, K 17%, Q 8%, R 8%, L 8%.
Syria: J 39%, E 29%, R 14%, G 14%, K 4%.

In a principal component analysis of a 2014 study, Druze were located between Lebanese people and Mizrahi Jews.[385]

According to a 2015 study, Druze have a largely similar genome with Middle Eastern Arabs, but they have not married outside of their clans in 1000 years and Druze families from different regions share a similarity with each other that distinguishes them from other Middle Eastern populations.[386]

A 2016 study based on testing samples of Druze in the historic region of Syria, in comparison with ancient humans (including Anatolian and Armenian), and on Geographic Population Structure (GPS) tool by converting genetic distances into geographic distances, concluded that Druze might hail from the Zagros Mountains and the surroundings of Lake Van in eastern Anatolia, then they later migrated south to settle in the mountainous regions in Syria, Lebanon and Israel.[387]

A 2020 study on remains from Canaanaite (Bronze Age southern Levantine) populations suggests a significant degree of genetic continuity in currently Arabic-speaking Levantine populations (including the Druze, Lebanese, Palestinians, and Syrians), as well as in most Jewish groups (including Sephardi Jews, Ashkenazi Jews, Mizrahi Jews, and Maghrebi Jews) from the populations of the Bronze Age Levant, suggesting that the aforementioned groups all derive more than half of their overall ancestry (atDNA) from Canaanite / Bronze Age Levantine populations,[388][389] albeit with varying sources and degrees of admixture from differing host or invading populations depending on each group.

Principal component analysis of some ancient and modern populations, including Druze (Almarri, Mohamed A. et al. 2021).

In a 2021 study, Druze were a part of the larger Levant-Iraq cluster in a fineSTRUCTURE tree analysis, and overlapped with Lebanese people in a principal component analysis.[390]

/druːz/ DROOZ; Arabic: دَرْزِيّ, darzī or دُرْزِيّ durzī, pl. دُرُوز, durūz

In 1962, Israel redefined the Druze's ethnic identity from "Arab" to "Druze" on official documents, creating a distinct political and national identity and establishing a separate education system to foster a "Druze and Israeli" consciousness. This initiative aimed to counteract "Arabization" and "Palestinianization", resulted in an independent Druze curriculum. While most Druze in Israel continue to identify as Arabs, some have adopted a distinct "Druze ethnic identity" for political or social reasons. Scholars argue that this policy, supported by a co-opted Druze political elite, privileges the Druze's communal aspects while marginalizing their broader ethnic and national identity.[63][64][65][66]

The Fātimid caliph al-Hakim bi-Amr Allah became a central figure in the Druze faith,[82] although his religious position was disputed among scholars.[citation needed] John Esposito states that al-Hakim believed that "he was not only the divinely appointed religio-political leader, but also the cosmic intellect linking God with creation",[88] while others like Nissîm Dānā and Mordechai Nisan state that he is perceived as the manifestation and the reincarnation of God or presumably the image of God.[citation needed]

Remove ye the causes of fear and estrangement from yourselves. Do away with the corruption of delusion and conformity. Be ye certain that the Prince of Believers hath given unto you free will, and hath spared you the trouble of disguising and concealing your true beliefs, so that when ye work ye may keep your deeds pure for God. He hath done thus so that when you relinquish your previous beliefs and doctrines ye shall not indeed lean on such causes of impediments and pretensions. By conveying to you the reality of his intention, the Prince of Believers hath spared you any excuse for doing so. He hath urged you to declare your belief openly. Ye are now safe from any hand which may bring harm unto you. Ye now may find rest in his assurance ye shall not be wronged. Let those who are present convey this message unto the absent so that it may be known by both the distinguished and the common people. It shall thus become a rule to mankind; and Divine Wisdom shall prevail for all the days to come.

But perhaps the most far reaching change [initiated by Nasser's guidance] was the fatwa commanding the readmission to mainstream Islam of the Shia, Alawis, and Druze. They had been considered heretics and idolaters for hundreds of years, but Nasser put an end to this for once and for all. While endearing himself to the majority Shia of Iraq and undermining Kassem [the communist ruler of Iraq at the time] might have played a part in that decision, there is no doubting the liberalism of the man in this regard.

Haber et al. 2013. Quote: 1 – "We show that religious affiliation had a strong impact on the genomes of the Levantines. In particular, conversion of the region's populations to Islam appears to have introduced major rearrangements in populations' relations through admixture with culturally similar but geographically remote populations, leading to genetic similarities between remarkably distant populations like Jordanians, Moroccans, and Yemenis. Conversely, other populations, like Christians and Druze, became genetically isolated in the new cultural environment. We reconstructed the genetic structure of the Levantines and found that a pre-Islamic expansion Levant was more genetically similar to Europeans than to Middle Easterners."

2 – "The predominantly Muslim populations of Syrians, Palestinians and Jordanians cluster on branches with other Muslim populations as distant as Morocco and Yemen."
3 – Lebanese Christians and all Druze cluster together, and Lebanese Muslims are extended towards Syrians, Palestinians, and Jordanians, which are close to Saudis and Bedouins."

Coptic Christianity

AI Overview
Who are Egypt's Coptic Christians?
Coptic Christianity refers to the Coptic Orthodox Church, one of the world's oldest Christian traditions, originating in Egypt with St. Mark the Apostle in the 1st century, known for its ancient roots, rich liturgy, strong monasticism, and distinct Miaphysite theology (believing Christ has one unified divine-human nature). Copts, the largest Christian group in Egypt, preserved ancient Egyptian (Coptic) language and culture, maintaining a continuous apostolic succession and separation from Chalcedonian churches since the 5th century, though sharing early Christian practices.
Key Aspects
Origin & History: Founded by St. Mark in Alexandria around 55 AD, it's an Apostolic Church with continuous history.
Identity: "Coptic" comes from the Greek for "Egyptian," referring to Egyptian Christians and their language (Coptic). "Orthodox" signifies adherence to original faith and traditions.
Theology: They are Oriental Orthodox, adhering to Miaphysitism, believing Christ has one unified nature (divine and human), differing from Chalcedonian churches (like Catholic/Eastern Orthodox) that define Christ as two distinct natures.
Leadership: Headed by the Pope of Alexandria, who is the Patriarch of the See of St. Mark, supported by bishops, priests (who can be married), and deacons.
Practices: Seven sacraments, extensive fasting, ancient liturgical services (Mass) using Coptic, Arabic, and other languages, and practices like removing shoes in holy places.
Community: The largest Christian community in the Middle East, primarily in Egypt, with large diaspora communities globally.
Distinctive Features
Preservation: Maintained ancient traditions, language, and theology with minimal changes over centuries.
Monasticism: A cornerstone of Coptic spiritual life, with monks often becoming bishops.
Culture: Deeply tied to Egyptian history, with cultural achievements like the Coptic Museum.

Eastern of Coptic?
Popular comment · A Romanian church makes a lot of sense, especially if you understand the language, and there are also OCA churches in NYC that have a fair number of Romanians, like the cathedral on 2nd street in Manhattan. As for the theological differences between Chalcedonians and non-Chalcedonians, this is a particularly complicated philosophical-theological rabbit-hole that you shouldn't let hinder you while you start practicing Christianity within a church community.

The Coptic Orthodox Church is celebrating the 17th centenary of the First Ecumenical Council of Nicaea (325 AD), one of the most significant councils in Christian history. Under the theme “Nicaea… A Living Faith,” the Church held a series of events that began last Tuesday and culminated in a major gathering at Saint Mark’s Cathedral in Abbassiya. During the celebration, His Holiness Pope Tawadros II led a procession carrying the chalice containing the relics of Saint Athanasius from the Fathers’ Shrine beneath the cathedral to the main church, accompanied by metropolitans, bishops, the patriarchal vicars of Cairo and Alexandria, priests, and the deacons’ choir. Groups of Coptic faithful of all ages lined the procession route, chanting the Nicene Creed in a special hymn, while choirs filled the cathedral courtyard. A commemorative photo was taken on the cathedral steps with His Holiness holding the relics. His Holiness stated: “Athanasius at Nicaea was the voice of unity, not division Popular comment · I think you would have better luck getting her to the join the Coptic Catholic Church than you convincing her priest to allow you to get married in the Coptic Orthodox Church without your converting. A Coptic Orthodox would NOT have to go through OCIA a/k/a RCIA (study of the Catholic faith) to become Catholic. You could then get married in an Eastern rite Catholic Church if an Coptic Catholic Church is not nearby.

Nothing is more powerful than the name of Jesus. In the Coptic Church, one of the most beautiful hymns sung is the Psali. Whether it is sung on an Adam or a Batos day, its melody fills the soul with peace, and the words continuously repeat the name of Jesus, the most powerful name of all. The church fathers have always taught us to repeat the name of Jesus all day and every day, for it is a holy name that terrifies the demons. In a Catechesis against apocryphal texts in the 5th century, it is quoted: “If you celebrate a feast and are joyful [say]: Jesus, if you have worry and suffering: Jesus; if the sons and daughters laugh: Jesus; those who touch water: Jesus; those who must flee from barbarians: Jesus; those who see wild beasts or other frightening things: Jesus; those who have pain or illness: Jesus; those who have been taken captive: Jesus; those who were unjustly judged and suffer injustice: Jesus. The name of Jesus alone is on their lips and is their salvation and their life

The Coptic Orthodox Church (Coptic: ϯⲉⲕ̀ⲕⲗⲏⲥⲓⲁ ⲛ̀ⲣⲉⲙⲛ̀ⲭⲏⲙⲓ ⲛ̀ⲟⲣⲑⲟⲇⲟⲝⲟⲥ, romanized: Ti-eklisia en-remenkimi en-orthodhoxos, lit. 'the Egyptian Orthodox Church'; Arabic: الكنيسة القبطية الأرثوذكسية, romanized: al-Kanīsa al-Qibṭiyya al-ʾUrthūdhuksiyya), also known as the Coptic Orthodox Patriarchate of Alexandria, is an Oriental Orthodox Christian church based in Egypt. The head of the church and the See of Alexandria is the pope of Alexandria on the Holy Apostolic See of Saint Mark, who also carries the title of Father of fathers, Shepherd of shepherds, Ecumenical Judge and the 13th among the Apostles.

The See of Alexandria is titular. The Coptic pope presides from Saint Mark's Coptic Orthodox Cathedral in the Abbassia District in Cairo. The church follows the Coptic Rite for its liturgy, prayer and devotional patrimony. Adherents of the Coptic Orthodox Church make up Egypt's largest and most significant minority population, and the largest population of Christians in the Middle East and North Africa (MENA).[1][2][3] They make up the largest share of the approximately 10 million Christians in Egypt.[8][9][10][11]

The Coptic Orthodox Church was established by Saint Mark, an apostle and evangelist, during the middle of the 1st century (c. AD 42).[12] Due to disputes concerning the nature of Christ, the Oriental Orthodox Churches were in schism after the Council of Chalcedon in AD 451.[13]

After AD 639, Egypt was ruled by its Islamic conquerors from Arabia. In the 12th century, the church relocated its seat from Alexandria to Cairo. The same century also saw the Copts become a religious minority. During the 14th and 15th centuries, Nubian Christianity was supplanted by Islam. In the 19th and 20th centuries, the larger body of ethnic Egyptian Christians began to call themselves Coptic Orthodox, to distinguish themselves from the Catholic Copts and from the Eastern Orthodox, who are mostly Greek.[14] In 1959, the Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahedo Church was granted autocephaly. This was extended to the Eritrean Orthodox Tewahedo Church in 1998 following the successful Eritrean War of Independence from Ethiopia. Since the 2011 Egyptian revolution, Coptic Christians have suffered increased religious discrimination and violence.[15]

Apostolic foundation

According to tradition, the Coptic Church was founded by St. Mark the Evangelist c. AD 42; it regards itself as the subject of many prophecies in the Old Testament.[12]

Coptic language in the church

The Coptic language is a universal language used in Coptic churches in every country. It descends from Ancient Egyptian and uses the Coptic alphabet, a script descended from the Greek alphabet with added characters derived from the Demotic script. Today, the Bohairic dialect of Coptic is used primarily for liturgical purposes.[16] Many of the hymns in the liturgy are in Coptic and have been passed down for many centuries. The language is used to preserve Egypt's original language, which was banned by the Arab invaders, who ordered the use of Arabic instead.[17] However, most Copts speak Arabic, the official language of Egypt.[16] Hence, Arabic is also used in church services nowadays. The service books, though written in Coptic, have Arabic text in parallel columns.[14]

Catechetical School of Alexandria

The Catechetical School of Alexandria is the oldest catechetical school in the world. Jerome records that the Christian School of Alexandria was founded by Mark himself.[18]

The theological college of the catechetical school was re-established in 1893.[19]

The school became a leading center of the allegorical method of biblical interpretation, espoused rapprochement between Greek culture and the Christian faith, and attempted to assert orthodox Christian teachings against heterodox views in an era of doctrinal flux.[20]

Role and participation in the ecumenical councils

Council of Nicaea

Main article: First Council of Nicaea

In the 4th century, an Alexandrian presbyter named Arius began a theological dispute about the nature of Christ that spread throughout the Christian world and is now known as Arianism. The Council of Nicea in AD 325 was convened by Emperor Constantine I after Pope Alexander I of Alexandria proposed holding a council to respond to heresies.[21] A council under the presidency of Hosius of Cordova attempted to resolve the dispute. This eventually led to the formulation of the Symbol of Faith, also known as the Nicene Creed.[22]

Council of Constantinople

Main article: First Council of Constantinople

In AD 381, Pope Timothy I of Alexandria presided over the second ecumenical council known as the First Council of Constantinople, to judge Macedonius, who denied the Divinity of the Holy Spirit. This council completed the Nicene Creed with this confirmation of the divinity of the Holy Spirit:

We believe in the Holy Spirit, the Lord, the Giver of Life, who proceeds from the Father, who with the Father and the Son is worshiped and glorified who spoke by the Prophets and in One, Holy, Catholic, and Apostolic church. We confess one Baptism for the remission of sins and we look for the resurrection of the dead and the life of the coming age, Amen[23]

Council of Ephesus

Main article: Council of Ephesus

Coptic Icon in the Coptic Altar of the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, Jerusalem

Another theological dispute in the 5th century occurred over the teachings of Nestorius, the patriarch of Constantinople who taught that God the Word was not hypostatically joined with human nature, but rather dwelt in the man Jesus. As a consequence of this, he denied the title "Mother of God" (Theotokos) to the Virgin Mary, declaring her instead to be "Mother of Christ" Christotokos.[citation needed]

The council confirmed the teachings of Athanasius and confirmed the title of Mary as "Mother of God".[24] It also clearly stated that anyone who separated Christ into two hypostases was anathema, as Cyril had said that there is "One Nature for God the Word Incarnate" (Mia Physis tou Theou Logou Sesarkōmenē). The introduction to the creed is formulated as follows:[citation needed]

We magnify you O Mother of the True Light and we glorify you O saint and Mother of God (Theotokos) for you have borne unto us the Saviour of the world. Glory to you O our Master and King: Christ, the pride of the Apostles, the crown of the martyrs, the rejoicing of the righteous, firmness of the churches and the forgiveness of sins. We proclaim the Holy Trinity in One Godhead: we worship Him, we glorify Him, Lord have mercy, Lord have mercy, Lord bless us, Amen.[24]

Council of Chalcedon

Main article: Council of Chalcedon

St. Mark Coptic Cathedral in Alexandria

The church of Alexandria was part in communion with the rest of Christendom until the Council of Chalcedon.[16] When, in AD 451, Emperor Marcian attempted to heal divisions in the church, the response of Pope Dioscorus–the Pope of Alexandria who was later exiled–was that the emperor should not intervene in the affairs of the church. It was at Chalcedon that the emperor, through the imperial delegates, enforced harsh disciplinary measures against Pope Dioscorus in response to his boldness. In AD 449, Pope Dioscorus headed the 2nd Council of Ephesus, called the "Robber Council" by Chalcedonian historians. It held to the Miaphysite formula which upheld the Christology of "One Incarnate Nature of God the Word" (Greek: μία φύσις Θεοῦ Λόγου σεσαρκωμένη (mia physis Theou Logou sesarkōmenē)).[25][13]

In terms of Christology, the Oriental Orthodox (Non-Chalcedonians) understanding is that Christ is "One Nature—the Logos Incarnate," of the full humanity and full divinity. The Chalcedonians' understanding is that Christ is recognized in two natures, full humanity and full divinity.[14] Oriental Orthodoxy contends that such a formulation is no different from what the Nestorians teach.[13]

From that point onward, Alexandria would have two patriarchs: the non-Chalcedonian native Egyptian one, now known as the Coptic pope of Alexandria and patriarch of All Africa on the Holy Apostolic See of St. Mark, and the Melkite or Imperial patriarch, now known as the Greek Orthodox patriarch of Alexandria.[26][13]

Almost the entire Egyptian population rejected the terms of the Council of Chalcedon and remained faithful to the native Egyptian Church (now known as the Coptic Orthodox Church).[27][28][29]

By anathematizing Pope Leo because of the tone and content of his tome, as per Alexandrine Theology perception, Pope Dioscorus was found guilty of doing so without due process; in other words, the Tome of Leo was not a subject of heresy in the first place, but it was a question of questioning the reasons behind not having it either acknowledged or read at the Second Council of Ephesus in AD 449. Pope Dioscorus of Alexandria was never labeled as a heretic by the council's canons. Copts also believe that the pope of Alexandria was forcibly prevented from attending the third congregation of the council from which he was ousted, apparently the result of a conspiracy tailored by the Roman delegates.[30]

Before the current positive era of Eastern and Oriental Orthodox dialogues, Chalcedonians sometimes used to call the non-Chalcedonians "Monophysites", though the Coptic Orthodox Church in reality regards Monophysitism as a heresy. The Chalcedonian doctrine in turn came to be known as "Dyophysite". A term that comes closer to Coptic Orthodoxy is Miaphysite, which refers to a conjoined nature for Christ, both human and divine, united indivisibly in the Incarnate Logos.[31][32]

From Chalcedon to the Arab conquest of Egypt

Muslim conquest of Egypt

Makurian wall painting depicting a Nubian bishop and Virgin Mary (11th century)

The Muslim invasion of Egypt took place in AD 639. Relying on eyewitness testimony, Bishop John of Nikiu in his Chronicle provides a graphic account of the invasion from a Coptic perspective. Although the Chronicle has only been preserved in an Ethiopic (Ge'ez) text, some scholars believe that it was originally written in Coptic.[33] John's account is critical of the invaders who he says "despoiled the Egyptians of their possessions and dealt cruelly with them",[34] and he details the atrocities committed by the Muslims against the native population during the conquest:

And when with great toil and exertion they had cast down the walls of the city, they forthwith made themselves masters of it, and put to the sword thousands of its inhabitants and of the soldiers, and they gained an enormous booty, and took the women and children captive and divided them amongst themselves, and they made that city a desolation.[35]

Though critical of the Muslim commander (Amr ibn al-As), who, during the campaign, he says "had no mercy on the Egyptians, and did not observe the covenant they had made with him, for he was of a barbaric race",[36] he does note that following the completion of the conquest, Amr "took none of the property of the Churches, and he committed no act of spoilation or plunder, and he preserved them throughout all his days."[37]

Despite the political upheaval, the Egyptian population remained mainly Christian. However, gradual conversions to Islam over the centuries had changed Egypt from a Christian to a largely Muslim country by the end of the 12th century.[38] Another scholar writes that a combination of "repression of Coptic revolts", Arab-Muslim immigration, and Coptic conversion to Islam resulted in the demographic decline of the Copts.[39] Egypt's Umayyad rulers taxed Christians at a higher rate than Muslims, driving merchants towards Islam and undermining the economic base of the Coptic Church.[40] Although the Coptic Church did not disappear, the Umayyad tax policies made it difficult for the church to retain the Egyptian elites.[41]

Under Islamic rule (640–1800)

Arabic Coptic Prayer book, 1760
In 969, Egypt entered the Fatimid dynasty (in Egypt from 969 to 1171), who adopted a largely favorable attitude toward the Christians. The major exception to this was the persecution led by Caliph al-Hakim between 1004 and 1013, which included clothing regulations, prohibition of publicly celebrating Christian festivals, and dismissal of Christian and Jewish functionaries. However, at the end of his reign al-Hakim rescinded these measures, allowing the Copts to regain privileged positions within the administration.[42]

The Coptic patriarchal residence moved from Alexandria to Cairo during the patriarchate of Cyril II (1078–92). This move was at the demand of the grand vizier Badr al-Jamali, who insisted that the pope establish himself in the capital.[42] When Saladin entered Egypt in 1163, this ushered in a government focused on defending Sunni Islam. Christians were again discriminated against, and meant to show modesty in their religious ceremonies and buildings.[42]

During the Ottoman period, Copts were classified alongside other Oriental Orthodox and Nestorian peoples under the Armenian millet.[43]

In 1798, the French invaded Egypt unsuccessfully and the British helped the Turks to regain power over Egypt under the Muhammad Ali dynasty.[44]

From the 19th century-1952 revolution

The position of Copts began to improve early in the 19th century under the stability and tolerance of the Muhammad Ali Dynasty. The Coptic community ceased to be regarded by the state as an administrative unit. In 1855 the jizya tax was abolished by Sa'id Pasha.[45] Shortly thereafter, the Copts started to serve in the Egyptian army.[46]

Coptic monks, between 1898 and 1914

Towards the end of the 19th century, the Coptic Church underwent phases of new development. In 1853, Pope Cyril IV established the first modern Coptic schools, including the first Egyptian school for girls. He also founded a printing press, which was only the second national press in the country. The pope established very friendly relations with other denominations, to the extent that when the Greek Patriarch in Egypt had to absent himself from the country for a long period of time, he left his church under the guidance of the Coptic patriarch.[46]

The Theological College of the School of Alexandria was reestablished in 1893.[19] It began its new history with five students, one of whom was later to become its dean. Today it has campuses in Alexandria and Cairo, and in various dioceses throughout Egypt, as well as outside Egypt. It has campuses in New Jersey, Los Angeles, Sydney, Melbourne, and London, where potential clergymen and other qualified men and women study many subjects, including theology, church history, missionary studies, and the Coptic language.[46]

In 1959, the Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahedo Church was granted its first own patriarch Abuna Basilios by Pope Cyril VI.[47] Furthermore, the Eritrean Orthodox Tewahedo Church similarly became independent of the Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahedo Church in 1994, when four bishops were consecrated by Pope Shenouda III of Alexandria to form the basis of a local Holy Synod of the Eritrean Church. In 1998, the Eritrean Orthodox Tewahedo Church gained its autocephaly from the Coptic Orthodox Church when its first patriarch was enthroned by Pope Shenouda III.[48]

Since the 1980s theologians from the Oriental (non-Chalcedonian) Orthodox and Eastern (Chalcedonian) Orthodox churches have been meeting in a bid to resolve theological differences, and have concluded that many of the differences are caused by the two groups using different terminology to describe the same thing.[49]

In the 1990s, the Orthodox Church of the British Isles (formerly the Catholicate of the West) joined the Coptic Orthodox Church as a diocese named the British Orthodox Church.[50][51][52] By 2015, it formally separated with the Coptic Orthodox Church as a non-canonical, autocephalous church.[53]

In the summer of 2001, the Coptic Orthodox and Greek Orthodox patriarchates of Alexandria agreed to mutually recognize baptisms performed in each other's churches, making re-baptisms unnecessary, and to recognize the sacrament of marriage as celebrated by the other.[54]

In Tahrir Square, Cairo, on Wednesday 2 February 2011, Coptic Christians joined hands to provide a protective cordon around their Muslim neighbors during salat (prayers) in the midst of the 2011 Egyptian Revolution.[55]

Continued persecution into the 21st century
Main article: Persecution of Copts
While Copts have cited instances of persecution throughout their history, Human Rights Watch has noted growing religious intolerance and sectarian violence against Coptic Christians in recent years, and a failure by the Egyptian government to effectively investigate properly and prosecute those responsible.[56][57] More than a hundred Egyptian copts were killed in sectarian clashes from 2011 to 2017, and many homes and businesses destroyed. In Minya, 77 cases of sectarian attacks on Copts between 2011 and 2016 were documented by the Egyptian Initiative for Personal Rights.[58]

Coptic Christian women and girls are often abducted and disappear.[59][60]

In 2015, 21 men traveled to Libya to support their families.[61] There, they would be kidnapped and beheaded by the Islamic State in Libya.

Under Pope Shenouda III, from 1971 to 2012, the church underwent a large transformation. Writing in 2013, the theologian Samuel Tadros stated "Today's Coptic Church as an institution is built solely on his vision".[62] For the first time in its history, the synod codified its internal laws. It also established numerous coptic institutions within and outside of Egypt. Shenouda raised the number of bishops from 26 to 117 and ordained hundreds of priests, which greatly reduced the influence of any one bishop. Shenouda also instituted a yearly meeting of the synod, which greatly expanded the number of laws governing the church. This included instituting church curriculums for the education of new priests, new deacons, and newly weds. For the first time in the Coptic Church's modern history, women could become ordained as deacons. The synod also adopted a model for community development, dramatically increasing the scope of community services provided by the church, including: hospitals, adult literacy schools, orphanages, libraries, and community centres. Much of this work was fuelled by donations from wealthy Coptic industrialists and Copts from abroad. Shenouda also held talks with the Eastern Orthodox and Roman Catholic churches, in an effort to promote ecumenism .[62] On 10 May 1973, Shenouda visited the Vatican, where a joint Christological declaration was issued jointly by the Coptic Orthodox and Catholic churches.[63]

Pope Shenouda also increased the church's involvement in politics, seeing it as a way to advocate for the interest of Copts, during the rise of Islamism in Egypt and increase in terrorist attacks. The president of Egypt, Anwar Sadat ordered that Shenouda be put into exile in a Coptic Monastery far away from Cairo in 1981. This exile was short lived, ending when Sadat was assassinated by Muslim extremists a few months later. Under president Hosni Mubarak, Shenouda continued his political stance and often protested persecution of Copts by leaving Cairo and staying in seclusion, which often caused the regime to quickly address issues. Shenouda's political involvement drew criticism from some church members, including the prominent monk Father Matta El Meskeen.[64][65]

On 17 March 2012, Pope Shenouda died, leaving many Copts mourning and worrying as tensions rose with Muslims. Shenouda constantly met with Muslim leaders in order to create peace, his death resulting in concerns that without his mediation good relations would break down. Many were worried about increased Islamic control of Egypt as the Muslim Brotherhood won 70% of the parliamentary elections.[66][67] Shenouda's approach to church leadership has, in part, been adopted by the current patriarch. Pope Tawadros II of Alexandria maintains relations with the Egyptian government and other churches. However, while Shenouda was critical of the expanded influence of Protestant teaching and books in Coptic churches, Tawadros has increased ecumenical dialogue with several Protestant churches. In 2013, Tawadros supported the movement demanding the removal of Egyptian Islamist president Mohamed Morsi.[68] However, Tawadros has been a relatively less political figure than his predecessor and has expressed support for the Egyptian government's institutions during crises.[69]

In 2020, a woman in Florida accused a former priest of sexual assault when she was a minor. She claimed that he was defrocked in 2014, but continued presenting himself as a priest. In response, the synod issued a public statement disavowing him and instituted anti-abuse measures. Several dioceses in North America and Europe issued statements in support of sexual assault survivors.[70][62][71]

On 10 May 2023, Pope Tawadros visited the Vatican to celebrate Coptic-Catholic Friendship day and the 50 year anniversary of the meeting between Pope Paul VI and Pope Shenouda III. In this same year Pope Francis announced that the 21 Coptic Martyrs killed by ISIS in Libya in 2015 would be added to the Catholic Roman Martyrology, and Pope Tawadros gifted relics from each of the 21 martyrs to the Vatican.[72]

Fasts, feasts, liturgy and canonical hours

Main articles: Coptic Rite, Coptic monasticism, and Fasting and abstinence of the Coptic Orthodox Church

The Agpeya is a breviary used in Coptic Orthodox Christianity to pray the canonical hours at seven fixed prayer times of the day, in the eastward direction.[73] Communicants of the Coptic Orthodox Church use a breviary known as the Agpeya to pray the canonical hours at seven fixed prayer times while facing in the eastward direction, in anticipation of the Second Coming of Jesus; this Christian practice has its roots in Psalm 119:164, in which the prophet David prays to God seven times a day.[74][73][75] Church bells enjoin Christians to pray at these hours.[76] Before praying, they wash their hands and face to be clean before and present their best to God; shoes are removed to acknowledge that one is offering prayer before a holy God.[74][77] During each of the seven fixed prayer times, Coptic Orthodox Christians pray "prostrating three times in the name of the Trinity; at the end of each Psalm ... while saying the 'Alleluia';" and 41 times for each of the Kyrie eleisons present in a canonical hour.[77] In the Coptic Orthodox Church, it is customary for women to wear a Christian headcovering when praying.[78] The Coptic Orthodox Church observes days of ritual purification.[79][80] However, while meat that still contains blood after cooking is discouraged from being eaten, the Coptic Church does not forbid its members from consuming any particular type of food, unlike in Islam or Judaism.[81]

A modern Coptic cathedral in Aswan.

All churches of the Coptic Orthodox Church are designed to face the eastward direction of prayer and efforts are made to remodel churches obtained from other Christian denominations that are not built in this fashion.[82]

In Coptic Orthodox Christianity, fasting is defined as going without meat or dairy.[83] With respect to Eucharistic discipline, Coptic Orthodox Christians fast from midnight onwards (or at least nine hours) prior to receiving the sacrament of Holy Communion.[84] They fast every Wednesday and Friday of the year (Wednesdays in remembrance of the betrayal of Christ, and on Fridays in remembrance of His crucifixion and death).[84] In total, fast days in a year for Coptic Orthodox Christians numbers between 210 and 240. This means that Copts abstain from all animal products for up to two-thirds of each year.[84][85] The fasts for Advent and Lent are 43 days and 55 days, respectively.[84] In August, before the celebration of the Dormition of the Mother of God, Coptic Christians fast 15 days; fasting is also done before the feast of Feast of Saints Peter and Paul, starting from the day of Pentecost.[84][85] Married couples refrain from sexual relations during Lent "to give themselves time for fasting and prayer".[83]

Christmas has been a national holiday in Egypt since 2003. It is the only Christian holiday in Egypt.[86] Coptic Christmas, which usually falls on January 6 or 7 is a major feast. Other major feasts are Epiphany, Palm Sunday, Easter, Pentecost, Ascension, and Annunciation. These are known in the Coptic world as the Seven Major Feasts. Major feasts are always preceded by fasts. Additionally, the Coptic Orthodox Church also has Seven Minor Feasts: the Circumcision of the Lord, Entrance into the Temple, Entrance into Egypt, Transfiguration, Maundy Thursday, Thomas Sunday, and Great Lent.[16][86][87] Furthermore, there are several indigenous feasts of the Theotokos. There are also other feasts commemorating the martyrdom of important saints from Coptic history.[85]

Demographics

Available Egyptian census figures and other third-party survey reports have not reported more than 4 million Coptic Orthodox Christians in Egypt.[1][2] However media and other agencies, sometimes taking into account the claims of the church itself, generally approximate the Coptic Orthodox population at 10% of the Egyptian population or 10 million people.[3][4][5] Egyptian Copts are the biggest Christian community in the Arab world. Estimates of their numbers vary, but generally range between 4.7 and 7.1 million.[88] The majority of them live in Egypt under the jurisdiction of the Coptic Orthodox Church. Since 2006, Egyptian censuses have not reported on religion and church leaders have alleged that Christians were under-counted in government surveys. In 2017, a government owned newspaper Al Ahram estimated the percentage of Copts at 10 to 15% and the membership claimed by the Coptic Orthodox Church is in the range of 20 to 25 million.[89][90][91][92]

There are also significant numbers in the diaspora outside Africa in countries such as the United States, Canada, Australia, France, and Germany. The exact number of Egyptian born Coptic Orthodox Christians in the diaspora is hard to determine and is roughly estimated to be close to 1 million.[93][94][95]

There are between 150,000 and 200,000 adherents in Sudan.[96][97]

Jurisdiction outside Egypt

Besides Egypt, the Church of Alexandria has jurisdiction over all of Africa. The following autocephalous churches have strong historical ties to the Coptic Orthodox Church.

Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahedo Church

Main article: Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahedo Church
Tradition holds that Ethiopia was first evangelized by St. Matthew and St. Bartholomew in the 1st century ce, and the first Ethiopian convert is thought to have been the eunuch in Jerusalem mentioned in The Acts of the Apostles (8:27–40). Ethiopia was further Christianized in the 4th century ce by two men (likely brothers) from Tyre—St. Frumentius.[98] Ever since the conversion of Ezana of Axum to Christianity by Frumentius in 325 AD, the Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahedo Church has received its archbishops from the Coptic Orthodox Church.[99] Until the mid-twentieth century, the metropolitans of the Ethiopian church were ethnic Copts. Joseph II consecrated Archbishop Abuna Basilios as the first native head of the Ethiopian Church on 14 January 1951. In 1959, Pope Cyril VI of Alexandria crowned Abuna Basilios as the first Patriarch of Ethiopia.[47]

Eritrean Orthodox Tewahedo Church

Main article: Eritrean Orthodox Tewahedo Church
Following the independence of Eritrea from Ethiopia in 1993, the newly independent Eritrean government appealed to Pope Shenouda III of Alexandria for Eritrean Orthodox autocephaly. In 1994, Pope Shenouda ordained Abune Phillipos as first Archbishop of Eritrea.[48]

Torn From Their Homeland, Bay Area Assyrians Yearn for ...

Assyrian Christianity refers to the ancient Christian traditions of the indigenous Aramaic-speaking people of Mesopotamia (Assyrians/Chaldeans/Syriacs), primarily using the East Syriac Rite (Church of the East) and West Syriac Rite (Syriac Orthodox), characterized by Syriac liturgy and deep historical roots, distinct from Greek/Latin Christianity, with major denominations including the Assyrian Church of the East, Chaldean Catholic Church, and Syriac Orthodox Church, all facing modern diaspora and persecution.

Key Characteristics:

Ancient Origins: Assyrians were among the earliest converts to Christianity, potentially in the 1st century AD, within the historical lands of Assyria (modern Iraq, Syria, Turkey, Iran).

Syriac Tradition: They belong to the broader Syriac Christian tradition, using Classical Syriac (an Eastern Aramaic dialect) as their liturgical language.

East Syriac Rite: The dominant rite, using the ancient Liturgy of Saints Addai and Mari, with major branches like the Assyrian Church of the East and the Chaldean Catholic Church (in communion with Rome).

Major Denominations:

Assyrian Church of the East: Follows the historical Church of the East tradition, known for its missionary expansion to Asia (India, China).

Chaldean Catholic Church: A branch that reunited with the Catholic Church in the 16th century, using the East Syriac Rite.

Syriac Orthodox Church: Uses the West Syriac Rite but shares Aramaic heritage; its patriarchal seat is in Damascus.

Historical Schisms: Theological and political differences, especially after the Council of Ephesus (431 AD), led to splits, creating distinct Eastern churches.

Modern Diaspora: Persecutions (like the Sayfo genocide) and conflict have dispersed Assyrian Christians globally, with significant communities in North America, Europe, Australia, and the Middle East.

In essence, Assyrian Christianity is an indigenous Aramaic expression of Christianity, rich in history, distinct liturgical rites, and enduring cultural identity, despite centuries of upheaval.

What people are saying

The first Assyrian religion was Ashurism derived from Ashur, the Assyrian supreme god. In 1st Century AD. under King Abgar V of Edessa, Assyrians were the first to collectively as a nation convert to Christianity. Considered as the first Patriarchs, Thaddeus, Thomas and Bartholomew lay the foundation for the Church of the East in 33 AD. Today, the church’s official name is the Holy Apostolic Catholic Assyrian Church of the East with Mar Dinkha IV as its Patriarch with his See in Chicago. By 451 AD. in the Council of Chalcedon, a conflict arose over the belief of whether or not Christ’s single inseparable nature was both human and divine, leading to the split of the Church of the East thus giving birth to the Syriac Orthodox Church (Jacobite). Presently, Mor Ignatius Zakka I is the Patriarch of Antioch and all the East with his See in Damascus. By 780 AD, the Syriac Orthodox Church witnessed a division when Mar Maron lead his followers from Syria to Mount Lebanon and founded the Mar

Did Oriental Orthodoxy and the (Assyrian) Church of the East break from Catholicism at the same time, and for the same reason(s)?
Popular comment · Different times and for different reasons, and they didn't break from "Catholicism", in the modern sense, but from the Early Unified Church (the East-West Schism that happened in ~1054 is what led to the distinction between Eastern Orthodoxy and Roman Catholicism). The Assyrian Church of the East broke away from the early, unified Church after the Council of Ephesus in 431 AD. The council condemned Nestorius for his Christological teaching that seemed to divide Christ into two persons (a human person and a divine person). The council also upheld the title of Mary as Theotokos (God-bearer), affirming the unity of Christ's person, which Nestorius was opposed to. There were also political aspects to the schism here, as Persia was trying to distance itself from Rome/Byzantium. The Oriental Orthodox Church broke away after the Council of Chalcedon in 451 AD. This council declared that Christ is one person in two natures, "without confusion, without change, without division, without separation". Those that would become known as the Oriental Orthodox opposed this definition because they felt it betrayed the teaching of St. Cyril of Alexandria, who had strongly emphasized the unity of Christ's nature ("one incarnate nature of the Word of God"). It's also worth noting also that there has been a lot of dialogue between the Eastern Orthodox and Oriental Orthodox Churches. Both sides came to realize that much of the split was terminological and political, not an essential difference in faith. Both affirm that Christ is fully God and fully man, one Person with divinity and humanity united. The Eastern Orthodox emphasize "in two natures", while the Oriental Orthodox emphasize "from two natures" (St. Cyril's phrasing). But both reject Nestorian division and Eutychian confusion. There have even been joint statements from both traditions that say that both actually confess the same Christological faith, though in different expressions. So there is hope of a restoration of communion within the next generation or so (we pray!).

Popular comment · Simple answer is Urbanization. Most of Mosul's Christians came from the surrounding villages, or Tikrit before the 1700s. In an attempt to fit in with the Arab Muslim culture around them, Sureth was gradually lost. Villages didn’t have to deal with this because the population was entirely Sureth speakers. This was a common trend among most Assyrians who lived in Urban areas before the genocide, ex. Mardin.

Ashur/Ashurism is not pagan.
Popular comment · Do you know the definition of "pagan'? It pretty much means "a person holding religious beliefs other than those of the main or recognized religions". Since Ashurism is not a main religion in the world, it is by definition a pagan religion. Love them or hate them, Christianity and Islam are NOT pagan religions, as they are major religions. As much as I dislike Islam, I won't call it a pagan religion and it will be silly to do so. What's wrong with "pagan" anyway? It's not even an insult. Early Christians made it an insult for "nonbelievers". So why fall for their perspective when you just denigrated them in your previous reply? Lol...

The Assyrian Church of the East[a] (ACOE), sometimes called the Church of the East[5][6] and officially known as the Holy Apostolic Catholic Assyrian Church of the East,[5][7][b] is an Eastern Syriac Christian denomination that follows the traditional Christology and ecclesiology of the historical Church of the East.[9] It belongs to the eastern branch of Syriac Christianity, and employs the Divine Liturgy of Saints Addai and Mari belonging to the East Syriac Rite. Its main liturgical language is Classical Syriac, a dialect of Eastern Aramaic. Officially known as the Church of the East until 1976, it was then renamed the Assyrian Church of the East,[10][11] with its patriarchate remaining hereditary until the death of Shimun XXI Eshai in 1975.

The Assyrian Church of the East is officially headquartered in the city of Erbil, in northern Iraq; its original area encompassed Iraq, southeastern Turkey, northeastern Syria and northwestern Iran, corresponding roughly to ancient Assyria. The current Catholicos-Patriarch of the Assyrian Church of the East, Mar Awa III, was consecrated in September 2021.

The Assyrian Church of the East claims continuity with the historical Church of the East, and is not in communion with the Catholic, Oriental Orthodox or Eastern Orthodox churches.[c] The faction of the original Church of the East that came into full communion with the Holy See between the 16th and 19th centuries is the Chaldean Catholic Church, whose members are mostly ethnic Assyrians. After the Common Christological Declaration in 1994 between the Church of the East and the Catholic Church, and a 2001 theological dialogue between the churches, they drew up guidelines for the faithful to have mutual admission to the Eucharist between the Chaldean Catholic Church and the Assyrian Church of the East.[12]

The Assyrian Church of the East has a traditional episcopal structure, headed by the Catholicos-Patriarch. Its hierarchy is composed of metropolitan bishops and diocesan bishops, while lower clergy consists of priests and deacons, who serve in dioceses (eparchies) and parishes throughout Western Asia, India, North America, Oceania, and Europe (including the Caucasus and Russia).[13]

History

A 6th-century Assyrian church, St. John the Arab, in the Assyrian village of Geramon
The Assyrian Church of the East considers itself as the continuation of the Church of the East, a church that originally developed among the Assyrians during the first century AD in Assyria, Upper Mesopotamia and northwestern Persia, east of the Byzantine Empire. It is an apostolic church established by Thomas the Apostle, Addai of Edessa, and Bartholomew the Apostle.

The distinction between the Assyrian Church of the East and the Chaldean Catholic Church resulted from the series of complex processes and events that occurred within the Church of the East during the transitional period that started in the middle of the 16th century, and lasted until the beginning of the 19th century.[14] That turbulent period was marked by several consequent splits and mergers, resulting in the creation of separate branches and rival patriarchal lines. During the entire period, one of the main questions of dispute was the union with the Catholic Church. Ultimately, the pro-Catholic branches were consolidated as the Chaldean Catholic Church, while the traditional branches were consolidated as the Assyrian Church of the East.[15]

During the patriarchal tenure of Shemon VII Ishoyahb (1539–1558), who resided in the ancient Rabban Hormizd Monastery near Alqosh, an internal dissent occurred over several issues, including the question of hereditary succession to the patriarchal throne, and the question of union with the Catholic Church. By that time, Franciscan missionaries had already gained some influence over several local communities,[16] and they took an active role in organizing the opposition to the patriarch at that time. By the end of 1552, a pro-Catholic party had been organized in Mosul under the leadership of the priest Yohannan Sulaqa,[17] who decided to legitimize his position by traveling to Rome and seeking confirmation by Pope Julius III (1550–1555).[18]

Receiving support from the Franciscan missionaries, he arrived in Rome and entered into full communion with the Catholic Church in February 1553. At that point, officials of the Roman Curia were given incorrect information that the elderly Patriarch Shemon VII had actually died. After some deliberation, the Roman pope decided to appoint Yohannan Sulaqa as "Patriarch of Babylon" and named the breakaway church as 'The Church of Assyria and Mosul" in April 1553.[19]

Upon consecration, Yohannan Sulaqa took the name Shimun and by the end of the year he returned to his homeland. He started to organize the pro-Catholic party by appointing several metropolitans and bishops.[18]

Further information: Numeration of the Eliya line patriarchs

Union with Rome was actively opposed by Patriarch Shemon VII Ishoyahb, who continued to reside in the Rabban Hormizd Monastery near the ancient Assyrian town of Alqosh. He was succeeded by his nephew Eliya (1558–1591), who was designated as Eliya "VII" in older historiography,[20][21] but renumbered as Eliya "VI" in recent scholarly works.[22][23][24] The same renumbering was applied to his successors, who all took the same name thus creating the Eliya line. During his patriarchal rule, the Eliya line preserved its traditional christology and full ecclesiastical independence.[25] His successor was Patriarch Eliya VII (VIII) (1591–1617), who negotiated on several occasions with the Catholic Church, in 1605 and 1610, and again in 1615–1616, but without any conclusion.[26] Further negotiations were abandoned by the next Patriarch Eliya VIII (IX) (1617–1660).[27] David Wilmshurst noted that his successor, Patriarch Eliya IX (X) (1660–1700) also was a "vigorous defender of the traditional faith".[28]

The Eliya line of traditionalist patriarchs continued throughout the entire 18th century, residing in the ancient Monastery of Rabban Hormizd, which was eventually attacked and looted by muslim Turks in 1743, at the beginning of the Ottoman–Persian War (1743–1746).[29] Faced with a centuries-old rivalry and frequent conflicts between two mighty Islamic empires (Ottoman and Persian), all Christian communities in the bordering regions were constantly exposed to danger – and not only in the times of war, since local, mainly Kurdish, warlords were accustomed to attacking Assyrian and Armenian Christian communities and monasteries and taking their land, often with Ottoman support. Patriarchs Eliya X (XI) (1700–1722) and Eliya XI (XII) (1722–1778) tried to improve the increasingly worsening position of their Christian flock by staying loyal to Ottoman authorities, but the local administration was frequently unable to provide effective protection.[30] The Eliya line of traditionalist patriarchs ended in 1804 with the death of Eliya XII (XIII) (1778–1804).[31][24]

The junior Shimun line of Qochanis

During the second half of the 16th century, traditionalist patriarchs of the Eliya line were faced with the continuous presence of the pro-Catholic movement, led by successors of Shimun VIII Yohannan Sulaqa. After his death in 1555, the newly established line of patriarchs who were united with the Catholic Church was continued by Abdisho IV Maron (1555–1570), who remained in full communion with the Catholic Church. He visited Rome and was officially confirmed by the Pope of Rome in 1562.[32] Soon after his death, connections with Rome were weakened for the first time during the tenure of Patriarch Yahballaha IV who did not seek confirmation from the pope.[33] That interlude was ended by his successor Shimun IX Dinkha (1580–1600) who restored full communion with the Catholic Church, and was officially confirmed by the Pope of Rome in 1584.[34]

After his death, the patriarchal office was made hereditary, and patriarchs of this line continued to use the name Shimun, thus creating the Shimun line. Hereditary succession was not acceptable to Rome, and during the tenure of the next Patriarch Shimun X Eliyah (1600–1638) ties with the Catholic Church were loosened again. In 1616, Shimun X signed a traditional profession of faith that was not accepted by the Roman pope, leaving the patriarch without Rome's confirmation.[35] His successor Shimun XI Eshuyow (1638–1656) restored communion with the Catholic Church as late as 1653, eventually receiving confirmation from the pope.[28] By that time, the movement towards full commitment to the traditional faith was constantly growing stronger within the Shimun line. When the next Patriarch Shimun XII Yoalaha decided to send his profession of faith to the pope, he was deposed by his bishops because of his pro-Catholic attitude. The pope tried to intervene on his behalf, but without success.[28]

Final resolution of conflicts within the Shimun line occurred under the next Patriarch Shimun XIII Dinkha (1662–1700), who definitively broke communion with the Catholic Church. In 1670, he gave a traditionalist reply to an approach that was made from the Roman pope, and by 1672 all connections with the Catholic Church were terminated.[36][37] At the same time, Patriarch Shimun XIII moved his seat from Amid to Qochanis. After the final return to the traditional faith, patriarchs of the Shimun line decided to keep their independence and after that time there were two independent lines of traditional patriarchs: the senior Eliya line in Alqosh and the junior Shimun line in Qochanis.[38]

Such division was additionally caused by the complex structure of local Assyrian communities, traditionally organized as tribal confederations with each tribe being headed by a local lord (malik), while each malik was ultimately subject to the patriarch, who mediated between Christian Assyrians and the Ottoman authorities.[39]

Consolidation of remaining branches

In 1780, at the beginning of the patriarchal tenure of Eliya XII (XIII) (1778–1804), a group seceded from the Eliya line in Alqosh and elected Yohannan Hormizd, who entered full communion with the Catholic Church and was officially appointed Archbishop of Mosul and patriarchal administrator of the Chaldean Catholic Church, in 1783. Only after the death in 1827 of the last representative of the Josephite line, Joseph V Augustine Hindi, was Yohannan recognized as the Chaldean Catholic patriarch by the pope, in 1830. By this official appointment, the final merger of various factions committed to the union with the Catholic Church was achieved, thus forming the modern Chaldean Catholic Church.

At the same time, the long coexistence and rivalry between two traditionalist patriarchal branches — the senior Eliya line of Alqosh and the junior Shimun line of Qochanis — ended in 1804 when the last primate of the Eliya line, Patriarch Eliya XII (XIII) died and was buried in the ancient Rabban Hormizd Monastery. His branch decided not to elect a new patriarch, thus enabling the remaining patriarch Shimun XVI Yohannan (1780–1820) of the Shimun line to become the sole primate of both Assyrian traditionalist branches.[40][41][38] Consolidated after 1804, the reunited traditionalist church led by patriarchs of the Shimun line became widely known as the "Assyrian Church of the East". Still based in Qodchanis, Assyrian Patriarch Shimun XVI Yohannan was not able to secure control over the traditional seat of the former Eliya line in the ancient Rabban Hormizd Monastery; and around 1808 that venerated monastic institution passed to the Chaldean Catholics.[42]

The next Assyrian Patriarch Shimun XVII Abraham (1820–1861) also governed his church from Qodshanis. During years marked by political turbulence, he tried to maintain good relations with the local Ottoman authorities. In 1843, he was faced with renewed hostilities from Kurdish warlords, who attacked and looted many Christian villages, killing 10,000 Christian men and taking away women and children as captives. The patriarch himself was forced to take temporary refuge in Mosul.[43] He was succeeded by Patriarch Shimun XVIII Rubil (1861–1903) who also resided in Qodshanis. In 1869, he received an open invitation from the Vatican to visit Rome to attend the First Vatican Council as an observer, but he did not accept the invitation,[44] In following years, he also rejected other initiatives for union with the Catholic Church.[45]

Early 20th century Assyrian archbishop and servants
By the end of the 19th century, the Assyrian Church of the East consolidated itself as the sole representative of all traditionalist Assyrians. It also managed to secure a certain level of autonomy within the highly complex system of Ottoman local governance in the bordering regions.[46] On several occasions, Assyrian patriarchs refused to enter communion with the Catholic Church or merge with the Chaldean Catholic Church.[38] On the other hand, by the end of the 19th century some of its communities were converted to Protestantism by various western missionaries,[47] while other communities were drawn to Eastern Orthodoxy. That movement was led by Assyrian Bishop Mar Yonan of Supurghan in the region of Urmia who converted to Eastern Orthodoxy in 1898, through the Russian Ecclesiastical Mission in Urmia.[48]

20th and 21st centuries

St. Mary Assyrian Church in Moscow. In spite of both ethnic and religious persecution and a serious decline in membership since its height around the fourth century, the Assyrian Church of the East has survived into the 21st century.
Among all the tragedies and schisms which thinned the church out, no other was as severe as the Assyrian genocide. At that point the Assyrian Church of the East was based in the mountains of Hakkari, as it had been since 1681. In 1915, The Young Turks invaded the region—despite the Assyrians' plea of neutrality during the Caucasus campaign by Russia and their Armenian allies—out of fear of an Assyrian independence movement. In response to this, Assyrians of all denominations (the Assyrian Church of the East, the Chaldean Catholic Church, the Syriac Orthodox Church and Assyrian Protestants) entered into a war of independence and allied themselves with the United Kingdom, the Russian Empire and the Armenians against the Ottomans and their Islamic Kurdish, Iranian and Arab allies.[49]

Despite the odds, the Assyrians fought successfully against the Ottomans and their allies for three years throughout southeastern Turkey, northern Iraq, northwestern Iran and northeastern Syria. Eventually, however, they were abandoned by their allies, the Russian Empire and the First Republic of Armenia, due to the Russian Revolution and the collapse of the Armenian defense, leaving the Assyrians vastly outnumbered, surrounded, and cut off from supplies of ammunition and food. During this period, their See at Qodchanis was completely destroyed and the Turks and their Islamic allies massacred all of the Assyrians in the Hakkari Mountains.[50]

Those who survived fled into Iran with what remained of the Assyrian defense under Agha Petros, but they were pursued into Iranian territory despite the fact they were fleeing. Later, in 1918, after the murder of their de facto leader and Patriarch Shimun XIX Benyamin and 150 of his followers during a negotiation, fearing further massacres at the hands of the Turks and Kurds, most of the survivors fled by train from Iran into what was to become Iraq. They sought protection under the British mandate there, and joined the already existing indigenous Assyrian communities of both Eastern Orthodox and Catholic rites in the north, where they formed communities in Baghdad, Basra, and other areas.[50]

Patriarch Shimun XXI Eshai

Main article: Shimun XXI Eshai

In the aftermath of World War I, the British-educated Patriarch Shimun XXI Eshai, born into the line of patriarchs at Qodchanis, had agitated for an independent Assyrian state. Following the end of the British mandate in 1933[50] and a massacre of Assyrian civilians at Simele by the Iraqi Army, the patriarch was forced to take refuge in Cyprus.[51] There, Shimun petitioned the League of Nations regarding his people's fate, but to little avail, and he was consequently barred from entering Syria and Iraq. He traveled through Europe before moving to Chicago in 1940 to join the growing Assyrian diaspora community there.[51]

Due to the church's and the general Assyrian community's disorganized state as a result of the conflicts of the 20th century, Patriarch Shimun XXI Eshai was forced to reorganize the church's structure in the United States. He transferred his residence to San Francisco in 1954, and was able to travel to Iran, Lebanon, Kuwait, and India, where he worked to strengthen the church.[52]

In 1964, the patriarch decreed a number of changes to the church, including liturgical reform, the adoption of the Gregorian calendar, and the shortening of Lent. These changes, combined with Shimun's long absence from Iraq, caused a rift in the community there, which led to another schism. In 1968, traditionalists within the church elected Thoma Darmo as a rival patriarch to Shimun XXI Eshai, forming the independent Ancient Church of the East, based in Baghdad, Iraq.[53]

In 1972, Shimun decided to step down as patriarch, and the following year he got married, in contravention to longstanding church custom. This led to a synod in 1973 in which further reforms were introduced, the most significant of which included the permanent abolition of hereditary succession — a practice introduced in the middle of the fifteenth century by Patriarch Shemon IV Basidi (who had died in 1497) — and it was also decided that Shimun should be reinstated. The second matter was supposed to be settled at another synod in 1975; however, Shimun was assassinated in November 1975 by an estranged relative before this could take place.[54]

Mar Gewargis Assyrian Cathedral in Chicago: Former Patriarchal See

Almost a year after the death of Shimun, Mar Khnanya Dinkha, Metropolitan of Tehran, convened a synod of seven Assyrian bishops which took place at St Paul's Abbey, Alton, in England, from 12 to 17 October 1976. They were joined by two Church of England bishops, representing the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of London, and elected Dinkha as the 120th Catholicos-Patriarch of the Church of the East. On 17

October he was consecrated as Dinkha IV at St Barnabas Church, Ealing, in an area where many Assyrians lived.[55]

Dinkha, who was then aged 33, operated his see at Tehran until the Iran–Iraq War of 1980–1988, when he went into exile in the United States and transferred the Patriarchal See to Chicago.[56] Much of his patriarchate had been concerned with tending to the Assyrian diaspora community and with ecumenical efforts to strengthen relations with other churches.[56] On 26 March 2015, Dinkha IV died in the United States, leaving the Assyrian Church of the East in a period of sede vacante until 18 September 2015. During that time, Aprem Mooken served as the custodian of the Patriarchate of Seleucia-Ctesiphon.[57][58]

On 18 September 2015, the Holy Synod of the Assyrian Church of the East elected the Metropolitan of Iraq, Jordan, and Russia, Warda Sliwa, to succeed the late Dinkha IV as Catholicos-Patriarch of the Assyrian Church of the East. On 27 September 2015, he was consecrated as Catholicos-Patriarch in the Cathedral Church of St. John the Baptist, in Erbil, Iraq. Upon his consecration, he assumed the ecclesiastical name Gewargis III.

Church leaders proposed moving the Patriarchal See from Chicago back to Erbil.[59]

There have also been talks of reunification. In the Common Christological Declaration Between the Catholic Church and the Assyrian Church of the East in 1994, the two churches recognized the legitimacy and rightness of each other's titles for Mary.[60]

In 2005, the Assyrian Church of the East had about 380,000 members,[61] mostly living in the United States, Iran, Iraq, Syria, and Turkey.[62][63]

On 6 September 2021, Mar Gewargis III formally stepped down as Catholicos-Patriarch during an Extraordinary Session of the Holy Synod of the Assyrian Church of the East, leaving the Patriarchal See vacant. On 8 September 2021, the Holy Synod elected Mar Awa Royel, Bishop of California and Secretary of the Holy Synod, to succeed Mar Gewargis III as the 122nd Catholicos-Patriarch of the Assyrian Church of the East.[64][65]

Following doctrinal traditions of the ancient Church of the East, the modern Assyrian Church of the East recognizes the first two ecumenical councils: the First Council of Nicaea (325), and the First Council of Constantinople (381). The Assyrian Church follows trinitarian doctrines, expressed in the Nicene Creed, and professes the eternal procession of the Holy Spirit from the Father.[66]

Christology

Theologically, the Assyrian Church of the East does not accept doctrinal definitions that were adopted at the Council of Ephesus (431) and the Council of Chalcedon (451), and still adheres to the Church of the East's traditional Christology, that is often labeled as Nestorian. The use and exact meaning of that term has been the subject of many debates, not only throughout history but also in modern times, since the Assyrian Church of the East has distinctive views on several Christological questions and claims that its theological doctrines and traditions are essentially Orthodox, while admitting the need for further inter-Christian dialogue that would resolve various questions in the field of comparative Christological terminology.[67]

The Nestorian nature of Assyrian Christianity remains a matter of contention. Elements of Nestorian doctrine were explicitly repudiated by Patriarch Dinkha IV on the occasion of his accession in 1976.[68]

The Christology of the Church of the East has its roots in the Antiochene theological tradition of the early church. The founders of Assyrian theology are Diodorus of Tarsus and Theodore of Mopsuestia, both of whom taught at Antioch. "Antiochene" is a modern designation given to the style of theology associated with the early church at Antioch, as contrasted with the theology of the Church of Alexandria.[69]

Antiochene theology emphasizes Christ's humanity and the reality of the moral choices he faced. In order to preserve the impassibility of Christ's Divine Nature, the unity of his person is defined in a looser fashion than in the Alexandrian tradition.[69] The normative Christology of the Church of the East was written by Babai the Great (d. 628) during the controversy that followed the 431 Council of Ephesus. Babai held that within Christ there exist two qnome (Syriac: ܩܢܘܡܐ / qnômâ, a complex term, equivalent for Greek term hypostasis), unmingled, but everlastingly united in the one prosopon (person) of Christ.

The precise Christological teachings of Nestorius are shrouded in obscurity. Wary of Monophysitism, Nestorius rejected Cyril's theory of a hypostatic union, proposing instead a much looser concept of prosopic union. Nestorianism has come to mean radical Dyophysitism,[70] in which Christ's two natures are eternally separate, though it is doubtful whether Nestorius ever taught such a doctrine. Nestorius' rejection of the term Theotokos ('God-bearer', or 'Mother of God') has traditionally been held as evidence that he asserted the existence of two persons (dyoprosopism) — not merely two natures — in Jesus Christ, but there exists no evidence that Nestorius denied Christ's oneness.[71] In the controversy that followed the Council of Ephesus, the term "Nestorian" was applied to all doctrine upholding a strictly Antiochene Christology. In consequence, the Church of the East was labelled Nestorian, though its official Christology was in fact defined by Babai the Great, at the council that was held in 612.[67]

Liturgy

The church employs the Syriac dialect of Eastern Aramaic in its liturgy, the East Syriac Rite, which includes three anaphoras, attributed to Addai of Edessa and Mari, Theodore of Mopsuestia, and later also Nestorius.[50]

Iconography

In their homes, Christians belonging to the Assyrian Church of the East hang a Christian cross (without the corpus) on the eastern wall of the main room.[72]

The Assyrian Church of the East does not make use of icons, and the interiors of its houses of worship are simple.[73] Iconography has been present in the Church of the East's history; opposition to religious images eventually became the norm due to the spread of Islam in the region, which forbade any type of depictions of saints and biblical prophets. Thus, the church was forced to get rid of her icons.[74][73]

A Nestorian Peshitta Gospel book written in Estrangela, from the 13th century, resides at the State Library of Berlin. This illustrated manuscript from Upper Mesopotamia or Tur Abdin proves that in the 13th century the church was not yet aniconic.[75] The Nestorian Evangelion preserved in the Bibliothèque nationale de France contains an illustration depicting Jesus Christ (not a crucifix) in the circle of a ringed cross (in the form of Celtic cross) surrounded by four angels.[76]

Three Syriac manuscripts from the early 19th century and earlier—they were edited into a compilation titled The Book of Protection by Hermann Gollancz—contain a number of illustrations which are more or less crude. These manuscripts prove the continuous use of images. Moreover, a life-size male stucco figure was discovered in a church of Seleucia-Ctesiphon from the late 6th century. Beneath this church were found the remains of an earlier church. Although it cannot be determined which Nestorian Church was involved, the discovery nevertheless proves that the Church of the East also used figurative representations.[75]

Saint Mary Church: an ancient Assyrian church located in the city of Urmia, West Azerbaijan province, Iran

The Assyrian Church of the East is governed by an episcopal polity, the same as other apostolic churches. The church maintains a system of geographical parishes organized into dioceses and archdioceses. The Catholicos-Patriarch is the head of the church. Its synod is composed of bishops who oversee individual dioceses and metropolitans who oversee episcopal dioceses in their territorial jurisdiction.

The Chaldean Syrian Church, which encompasses India and the Persian Gulf, is the largest diocese of the church. Its history goes back to the Church of the East that established a presence in Kerala, but the two communities maintained only a sporadic connection for several centuries, and consistent relations were only established with the arrival of the Portuguese in India around 1500. The church is represented by the Assyrian Church of the East and is in communion with it.

Membership is estimated to 385,000 adherents,[61] although some[which?] sources say as high as 500,000.[77] According to scholar James Minahan around 19% of the Assyrian people belong to the Assyrian Church of the East.[78] In its own 2018 Report on Religious Freedom, the United States Department of State put the Assyrian Church of the East adherents at approximately 20% of the Christians in Iraq.[79]

Hierarchy

Due to the unstable political, religious and economic situation in the church's historical homeland of the Middle East, many of the church members now reside in Western countries. Churches and dioceses have been established throughout Europe, America, and Oceania.[13]

Archdioceses

Archdiocese of Australia, New Zealand and Lebanon – established in October 1984.
Archdiocese of Syria – jurisdiction lies throughout all Syria, particularly in the al-Hasakah Governorate, where most of the community resides in al-Hasakah, Qamishli and the 35 villages along the Khabur River. There are also small communities in Damascus and Aleppo.
Archdiocese of India – the archdiocese's territory includes the city of Thrissur and surrounding, mostly in the state of Kerala.

Ecumenical relations
On November 11, 1994, a historic meeting between Patriarch Dinkha IV and Pope John Paul II took place in Rome. Both signed a document titled "Common Christological Declaration Between the Catholic Church and the Assyrian Church of the East". One side effect of this meeting was that the Assyrian Church of the East's relationship with the fellow Chaldean Catholic Church began to improve.[82]

The Assyrian Church of the East was never admitted a full member of the Middle East Council of Churches, due to the Coptic Orthodox Church accusing the Assyrian Church of the East to be Nestorian, and thus, heretical.[6]

The lack of a coherent institution narrative in the Anaphora of Addai and Mari, which dates to apostolic times, has caused many Western Christians, and especially Roman Catholics, to doubt the validity of this anaphora, used extensively by the Assyrian Church of the East, as a prayer of consecration of the eucharistic elements. In 2001, after a study of this issue, Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger (later Pope Benedict XVI), then Prefect of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, promulgated a declaration approved by Pope John Paul II stating that this is a valid anaphora. This declaration opened the door to a joint synodal decree officially implementing the present Guidelines for Admission to the Eucharist between the Chaldean Church and the Assyrian Church of the East.[83]

The Assyrian Church of the East uses neither images nor icons. A stand, holding a copy of the Gospels and covered with a cloth, bears a simple cross that is venerated with the kiss of peace that people in other Eastern churches accord to their icons. The simplicity of their church interiors may reflect a concession to the Islamic objection to religious pictures in places of worship, or it may merely attest to the poverty of an isolated Christian people.

AI Overview

Islamic magick (non-Sufi) is a complex topic where mainstream Islam strictly forbids magic (sihr) as disbelief (shirk), viewing it as Satanic, but acknowledges ruqyah (Quranic healing) and practices involving sacred names/talismans (often tied to jinn) that some scholars permit for protection, though this blurs lines with forbidden arts, especially those involving darker spirits or coercion, often linked to ancient Egyptian/Persian traditions, making "non-Sufi" magic a fringe, often illicit, pursuit.

Forbidden Magic (Sihr)
Definition: Seeking power from anything other than Allah, involving demons, curses, or controlling others.
Islamic View: Major sin (shirk), disbelief (kufr), leading to hellfire.
Examples: Black magic, witchcraft, fortune-telling, manipulating jinn.
Permitted/Licit Practices (Often Misunderstood as Magic)
Ruqyah: Healing using Quranic verses, supplications (du'a), and seeking refuge in Allah.
Sacred Names/Talismans (Ta'wiz): Using Allah's names, Quranic verses, or angelic names for protection against evil eye, sickness, or jinn.
Spiritual Warfare: Using prayer and faith (tawakkul) against magic's effects.
The Gray Area & Non-Sufi Practices
Ancient Roots: Some practices draw from pre-Islamic traditions (e.g., Egyptian) where spirits were controlled.
Jinn Manipulation: "Licit" vs. "illicit" magic often hinges on whether benevolent (angels, righteous jinn) or malevolent (demons) entities are invoked.
Non-Sufi: While Sufis often engage in spiritual disciplines, "non-Sufi" magic often refers to folk practices, talismans, or esoteric systems (like the Shams al-Ma'arif) that use Islamic symbols but operate outside mainstream theology, sometimes bordering on or fully entering forbidden sihr.
Key Distinction
Islam emphasizes Tawhid (Oneness of God): Any practice that suggests another power can grant wishes or cause harm, even with Islamic symbols, is problematic. True strength comes from Allah alone, through prayer and adherence to scripture, not magical control.

Sri Yantra by Harish Johari using traditional colors

Unalome is the sacred Yantra used widely in Southeast Asian Buddhism

Yantra (Sanskrit: यन्त्र, romanized: yantrá, lit. 'machine, contraption'[1]) is a geometrical diagram, mainly from the Tantric traditions of the Indian religions. Yantras are used for the worship of deities in temples or at home; as an aid in meditation; and for the benefits believed given by their occult powers based on Hindu astrology and tantric texts. They are also used for adornment of temple floors, due mainly to their aesthetic and symmetric qualities. Specific yantras are traditionally associated with specific deities and/or certain types of energies used for accomplishment of certain tasks or vows that may be either materialistic or spiritual in nature. They become a prime tool in certain sadhanas performed by the sadhaka, the spiritual seeker. Yantras hold great importance in Hinduism, Jainism, and Buddhism.

Representations of the yantra in India have been considered to date back to 11,000–10,000 BCE.[2] The Baghor stone, found in an Upper Paleolithic context in the Son River Valley, is considered the earliest example[3] by G. R. Sharma, who was involved in the excavation of the stone (it was dated to 25,000–20,000 BCE). The triangular stone, which includes triangular engravings on one side, was found daubed in ochre in what was considered a site related to worship. Worship of goddesses in that region was found to be practiced in a similar manner to the present day.[4] Kenoyer, who was also involved in the excavation, considered it to be associated with Shakti. This triangular shape looks very much similar to Kali Yantra and Muladhara Chakra.[5]

Mantras, the Sanskrit syllables inscribed on yantras, are essentially "thought forms" representing divinities or cosmic powers that exert their influence by means of sound-vibrations.[6]

Etymology

In Rigvedic Sanskrit, yantra meant an instrument for restraining or fastening, a prop, support, or barrier, etymologically deriving from the root yam, "to sustain, support" and the -tra suffix, expressing instrumentation. The literal meaning is still evident in the medical terminology of Sushruta, where the term refers to blunt surgical instruments such as tweezers or a vice. The meaning of "mystical or occult diagram" arises in the medieval period (Kathasaritsagara, Pancharatra).[7]

Usage and meaning

Yantras are usually associated with a particular deity and are used for specific benefits, such as: for meditation; protection from harmful influences; development of particular powers; attraction of wealth or success, etc.[8] For instance, the Sivali yantra, used mainly in Southeast Asian Buddhism, is used for the attraction of wealth and good luck.[citation needed] They are often used in daily ritual worship at home or in temples, and sometimes worn as a talisman.[9]

As an aid to meditation (meditative painting), yantras represent the deity that is the object of meditation. These yantras emanate from the central point, the bindu. A yantra typically has several geometric shapes radiating concentrically from the center, including triangles, circles, hexagons, octagons, and symbolic lotus petals. The outside often includes a square representing the four cardinal directions, with doors to each. A popular form is the Sri Chakra, or Sri Yantra, which represents the goddess in her form as Tripura Sundari. Sri Chakra also includes a representation of Shiva, and is designed to show the totality of creation and existence, along with the user's own unity with the cosmos.[9]

Yantras can be on a flat surface or three-dimensional. They can be drawn or painted on paper, engraved on metal, or any flat surface. They tend to be smaller in size than the similar mandala, traditionally with less color.[10]

Occult yantras are used as good luck charms, to ward off evil, as preventative medicine, in exorcism, etc., by virtue of magical power. When used as talismans, yantras are viewed as representing a deity who can be called on at will by the user. They are traditionally consecrated and energized by a priest, including the use of mantras closely associated with the specific deity and yantra. Practitioners believe that a yantra that is not energized with a mantra is lifeless.[9] In Sri Lankan Buddhism, practitioners are required to have the yantra of the deity with them, once the deity has shown acceptance of their prayer.[citation needed]

Gudrun Bühnemann classifies three general types of yantras based on their usage:

Yantras that are used as foundation for ritual implements such as lamps or vessels. These are typically simple geometric shapes upon which the implements are placed.
Yantras used in regular worship, such as the Sri Yantra. These include geometric diagrams energized with mantras to the deity, and sometimes include written mantras in the design.
Yantras used in specific desire-oriented rites. These are often made on birch bark or paper, and can include special materials such as flowers, rice paste, or ashes.[10]

Structural elements and symbolism

Kali yantra

The yantra of Matangi, the tantric Saraswati
A yantra comprises geometric shapes, images, and written mantra. Triangles and hexagrams are common, as are circles and lotuses of 4 to 1,000 petals. Saiva and Shakti yantras often feature the prongs of a trishula.[11]

Mantra
Yantras frequently include mantras written in Sanskrit.
Use of colors in traditional yantra is entirely symbolic, and not merely decorative or artistic. Each color is used to denote ideas and inner states of consciousness. White/Red/Black is one of the most significant color combinations, representing the three qualities or gunas of nature (prakriti). White represents sattwa or purity; red represents rajas or the activating quality; black represents tamas or the quality of inertia. Specific colors also represent certain aspects of the goddess. Not all texts give the same colors for yantras. Aesthetics and artistry are meaningless in a yantra if they are not based on the symbolism of the colors and geometric shapes.[12]
Bindu
The central point of traditional yantras have a bindu or point, which represents the main deity associated with the yantra. The retinue of the deity is often represented in the geometric parts around the center. The bindu in a yantra may be represented by a dot or small circle, or may remain invisible. It represents the point from which all of creation emanates. Sometimes, as in the case of the Linga Bhairavi yantra, the bindu may be presented in the form of a linga.[13]
Trikonā
Most Hindu yantras include trikonā (triangles). Downward-pointing triangles represent the feminine aspect of God or Shakti, while upward-pointing triangles represent God's masculine aspect, as in Shiva.
Satkonā
Satkonās or Hexagrams as shown in yantras are two equilateral triangles intertwined, representing the union of male and female aspects of divinity, or Shiva and Shakti.
Lotus (Kamal)
Mandalas and yantras both frequently include lotus petals, which represent purity and transcendence. Eight-petaled lotuses are common, but lotuses in yantras can include 2, 4, 8, 10, 12, 16, 24, 32, 100, 1000 or more petals.
Circle (Gola)
Many mandalas have three concentric circles in the center, representing manifestation.
Outer square
Many mandalas have an outer square or nested squares, representing the earth and the four cardinal directions. Often they include sacred doorways on each side of the square or Chakorā.
Panchkonā
Yantras infrequently use a Panchkonā (pentagram). Some yantras of Guhyakali have a pentagram, due to the number five being associated with Kali.
Ashtakonā

Ashtakonās or octagons are also infrequent in yantras, where they represent the eight directions.[11]

Yantra designs in modern times have deviated from the traditional patterns given in ancient texts and traditions. Designers in the west may copy design elements from Nepali/tantric imitations of yantras.[14]

Cambodian monk covered in yantra tattoos

Yantra Tattooing or Sak Yuant is a form of tattooing using yantra designs in Buddhism. It consists of sacred geometrical, animal and deity designs accompanied by Pali phrases that are said to offer power, protection, fortune, charisma and other benefits for the bearer. Sak yant designs are normally tattooed by ruesi, wicha practitioners, and Buddhist monks or Brahmin priests, traditionally with a metal rod sharpened to a point (called a khem sak).[15]

The world's largest Sri Chakra, measuring 67,400 sq ft was drawn on ground in Cranbury, New Jersey under the guidance of Guru Karunamaya.[16]

The Secret of the Golden Flower and Its Application to Tai ...

Taoist alchemy texts, like the renowned Secret of the Golden Flower (SGF), are spiritual manuals detailing inner alchemy (Neidan) for achieving enlightenment, immortality, or spiritual rebirth through cultivating vital energies (Qi, Shen) and balancing Yin/Yang, often using meditation and breathwork to "turn the light around" to reveal one's true spiritual essence (the "golden flower"). SGF, translated by Richard Wilhelm with commentary by C.G. Jung, synthesizes Daoist, Buddhist, and Confucian ideas, focusing on transforming dense lower soul (yin) into clear spiritual light (yang) for spiritual transformation.

Key Concepts in SGF & Daoist Alchemy:

Inner Alchemy (Neidan): Focuses on internal cultivation, using the body's own energies rather than external elixirs, to achieve spiritual goals.

The Golden Flower: A metaphor for the radiant, luminous spiritual essence or primordial awareness within.

Turning the Light Around (Huan Yuan): A core practice of focusing consciousness inward, circulating spiritual light (Shen) to unify Yin and Yang energies.

Yin & Yang: The complementary forces of the universe; imbalance leads to illness, balance fosters spiritual growth.

Qi (Energy) & Shen (Spirit/Mind): Cultivating and circulating vital energy (Qi) and consciousness (Shen) is central.

Dantian (Elixir Field): The energy center, often in the lower abdomen, where cultivation begins.

Other Important Texts & Traditions:

Classic of Purity (Qing Jing Jing): Focuses on emptiness and stillness as the path to purity.

Tao Te Ching & Zhuangzi: Foundational Daoist texts, providing philosophical basis for balancing self with the Tao.

The Yellow Emperor's Classic of Internal Medicine (Huangdi Neijing): Discusses Qi, meridians, and health, foundational to internal practices.

Key Texts & Figures:

Richard Wilhelm & C.G. Jung: Wilhelm's translation of SGF (1929) introduced it to the West, profoundly influencing Jung and Western psychology.

The Golden Elixir (Jindan): Refers to the ultimate goal of alchemy, the perfected spirit or immortal body, also a key concept in SGF.

These texts describe methods like abdominal breathing, focusing awareness in the heart, and circulating light to achieve profound spiritual states, health, and longevity, bridging ancient Chinese wisdom with modern understanding of consciousness.

AI Overview

Manuscript fragments of the Merlin legend now published ...
"The Red Serpent (Manuscript fragments)" likely refers to fictional elements in books or games, such as the "Serpent Papers" in Jessica Cornwell's novel involving alchemical secrets, or fragments found in the game Genshin Impact during the Enkanomiya quest "The Trail of Drake and Doubters" (part of the "Before the Sun's Return" storyline), often featuring illuminated serpents in real medieval documents that inspire such tales.
In Gaming (Genshin Impact):
"The Trail of Drake and Doubters": Players collect three fragments in Enkanomiya by solving puzzles and fighting enemies (wolves, Pyro Lectors) to give to an NPC named Ru, uncovering lore.
In Literature (Fictional):
"The Serpent Papers" by Jessica Cornwell: A novel featuring a palimpsest (reused parchment) called the "Serpent Papers," containing clues from alchemical texts related to medieval philosophy (Ramon Llull) and esoteric verse, central to a murder mystery.
In Real-World History/Art (Inspiration):
Illuminated Manuscripts: Medieval charters, like one from 1402 at Trinity College Dublin, sometimes feature letters (like 'S') illuminated as red serpents or dragons, inspiring fictional "red serpent" motifs in media.
So, depending on where you encountered the term, it's either a quest item, a plot device in a thriller, or a reference to historical manuscript art.

AI Overview
"Le Dragon Vert" (The Green Dragon) refers to several things, including a classic French fairy tale ("Le Serpentin Vert"), an art piece by Salvador Dalí, various books by authors like Jacques Goldstyn, a comic book character (Sarah Spits), and even a fantasy tavern in Lord of the Rings lore, generally representing a mythical green dragon in French or fantasy contexts, often a transformed prince or a powerful magical being.
Here's a breakdown of common meanings:
Fairy Tale: In Marie-Catherine d'Aulnoy's 1698 tale, Le Serpentin Vert, the Green Dragon is a handsome king under a spell, with green wings and fiery eyes, similar to Eros and Psyche.
Art: Salvador Dalí created a limited-edition etching and aquatint print titled Le Dragon Vert.
Books: Jacques Goldstyn wrote a children's book called Le Dragon Vert, and there's a French edition of a book by Oscar Goldstein.
Comics: Marc Wasterlain wrote and illustrated a story called Le dragon vert within the Sarah Spits comic series.
Fantasy: In The Lord of the Rings fandom (Fandom Wiki), "Dragon Vert" can refer to the Green Dragon Inn in the fictional town of Bree.
Essentially, it's a popular French phrase for a green dragon, appearing across different media and stories.

The full sigil of Lucifer, as it originally appeared in the Grimorium Verum
The Grimorium Verum (Latin for True Grimoire) is an 18th-century grimoire attributed to one "Alibeck the Egyptian" of Memphis, who purportedly wrote it in 1517. Like many grimoires, it claims a tradition originating with King Solomon.

The grimoire is not a translation of an earlier work as purported, its original appearing in French or Italian in the mid-18th century, as noted already by A. E. Waite who discussed the work in his The Book of Ceremonial Magic (1911), stating:

The date specified in the title of the Grimorium Verum is undeniably fraudulent; the work belongs to the middle of the eighteenth century, and Memphis is Rome.

One version of the Grimoire was included as The Clavicles of King Solomon: Book 3 in one of the French manuscripts S. L. MacGregor Mathers incorporated in his version of the Key of Solomon, but it was omitted from the Key with the following explanation:[1]

At the end there are some short extracts from the Grimorium Verum with the Seals of evil spirits, which, as they do not belong to the Key of Solomon proper, I have not given. For the evident classification of the Key is in two books and no more.

Idries Shah also published some of it in The Secret Lore of Magic: Book of the Sorcerers in 1957.

Magical Treatise of Solomon

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

Magical Treatise of Solomon

15th century Greek manuscript, now at the British Library, London

Author	Unknown
Language	Medieval Greek
Genre	Grimoire

The Magical Treatise of Solomon,[1][2] also known as the Hygromanteia (Greek: Ὑγρομαντεία)[a] or Solomonikê (Greek: Σολομωνική),[4][b] is a collection of late Byzantine grimoires. A pseudepigraphon, the book was written in medieval Greek and purports to contain Solomon's instructions to his son Rehoboam on various magical techniques and tools. It includes guides on how to summon and control spirits and their powers, instructions on the selection of charms and the magical uses of herbs, as well as different means of divination and astrological beliefs. The Magical Treatise survives in fragments from a number of manuscripts dating from the 15th century CE. The book has been important for the history of European magic, serving as a link between the earlier Greek magical practices and the later grimoires of Western Europe. During the early modern period, the book began to be translated in Latin, becoming the source for future European grimoires, most notably the Key of Solomon.[7][5]

History

Composition

The oldest preserved manuscripts of the Magical Treatise date from the 14th century, and the majority from the 15th century CE. Torijano (2002) asserts that the text originates from the early Byzantine period and it might have been composed in Italy, as the Greek text appears to be particularly well-composed and it shows some Italian influence.[8] He further suggests that, due to the lack of obvious signs of Christianization in the text, the work preserves much older material that could go as far back as the early centuries of the common era;[8] a theory that is either accepted[4] or at least regarded as plausible. Marathakis (2011) writes that if, according to Torijano, the text was first composed in Italy, it would have been some time between the 6th and 11th centuries, when parts of Italy were under Byzantine rule. Nevertheless, Marathakis finds it more probable that the work was in fact composed in Venetian-ruled Crete some time between the 13th or 14th centuries.[9] McCown argued that the book was known to Byzantine scholars prior to the 13th century based on Niketas Choniates' reference of a certain "Solomonic book", which allowed sorcerers to summon demons in legions. Marathakis notes that, except for the Magical Treatise, this description also fits the earlier Testament of Solomon, which could be the book that Choniates was referring to instead.[10]

Influence

The Magical Treatise of Solomon served as a bridge connecting the magical practices of late antiquity and the Middle Ages with the later European grimoires of the Renaissance, the most widely known being the Key of Solomon.[11] Early copies of the Magical Treatise were appended to or incorporated elements of the Roman-era Testament of Solomon.[12][13] Portions of the Treatise also select ideas which may bear distant relationships to the Book of Abramelin,[14][4] the Greek Magical Papyri (particularly the "Sword of Dardanus"), Sefer Raziel HaMalakh, Sepher Ha-Razim, the Sword of Moses, [15] and the Cyranides.[16]

The Magical Treatise itself has been an important source of material for the Key of Solomon, from which a number of European grimoires later derived.[7] The introduction of the Magical Treatise in the Italian peninsula likely occurred after the sack of Constantinople by the Ottomans, which caused a wave of scholars to migrate to Italy, bringing with them a large number of Greek manuscripts for safety. Among those manuscripts, their Hygromanteia would almost certainly be included.[17] As a result of the close affinity between the two works, the Greek Magical Treatise is sometimes regarded as the earliest copy of the Key of Solomon before its translation into Latin in the 16th century.[5] Similarly, one of the earliest manuscripts of the Key of Solomon is also classified as a late copy of the Magical Treatise.[18] Some manuscripts of the Treatise featured demons assigned to the four cardinal directions, distinct from those found in the Lesser Key of Solomon and related works, but very similar to those found in later works such as the Grand Grimoire and Grimoirium Verum.[19] Portions of the Treatise also have some relationship to the Heptameron of Pietro d'Abano, the Lesser Key of Solomon, and the Sworn Book of Honorius.[20]

Contents

The Magical Treatise provides instructions on how to create planetary, daily, and hourly talismans,[21] a magic sword, vessels for divination and conjuration, wax figures, scrolls (written in the blood of a bat), a ring, special clothing, and a garland, all intended to control summoned spirits.[22] Angelic conjurations, general prayers to God, and prayers to control planetary influences are listed. Astrological beliefs, including supposed relationship between planets and select plants, are presented as esoteric knowledge. Different angels and demons over different planets, days, and hours are named, as well as what function they perform,[23][24] although the lists are mostly unique to each manuscript.[25] Angels mentioned include Michael, Gabriel, Uriel, Raphael, and Anael. Demons mentioned include Asmodeus, Abizouth, Oniskeliá, Lucifer (as Loutzipher), Astaroth, and Beelzebub.[26]

Taoist Alchemy Texts (e.g., Secret of the Golden Flower)

AI Overview
The Secret of the Golden Flower and Its Application to Tai ...
Taoist alchemy texts, like the renowned Secret of the Golden Flower (SGF), are spiritual manuals detailing inner alchemy (Neidan) for achieving enlightenment, immortality, or spiritual rebirth through cultivating vital energies (Qi, Shen) and balancing Yin/Yang, often using meditation and breathwork to "turn the light around" to reveal one's true spiritual essence (the "golden flower"). SGF, translated by Richard Wilhelm with commentary by C.G. Jung, synthesizes Daoist, Buddhist, and Confucian ideas, focusing on transforming dense lower soul (yin) into clear spiritual light (yang) for spiritual transformation.
Key Concepts in SGF & Daoist Alchemy:
Inner Alchemy (Neidan): Focuses on internal cultivation, using the body's own energies rather than external elixirs, to achieve spiritual goals.
The Golden Flower: A metaphor for the radiant, luminous spiritual essence or primordial awareness within.
Turning the Light Around (Huan Yuan): A core practice of focusing consciousness inward, circulating spiritual light (Shen) to unify Yin and Yang energies.
Yin & Yang: The complementary forces of the universe; imbalance leads to illness, balance fosters spiritual growth.
Qi (Energy) & Shen (Spirit/Mind): Cultivating and circulating vital energy (Qi) and consciousness (Shen) is central.
Dantian (Elixir Field): The energy center, often in the lower abdomen, where cultivation begins.
Other Important Texts & Traditions:
Classic of Purity (Qing Jing Jing): Focuses on emptiness and stillness as the path to purity.
Tao Te Ching & Zhuangzi: Foundational Daoist texts, providing philosophical basis for balancing self with the Tao.
The Yellow Emperor's Classic of Internal Medicine (Huangdi Neijing): Discusses Qi, meridians, and health, foundational to internal practices.
Key Texts & Figures:
Richard Wilhelm & C.G. Jung: Wilhelm's translation of SGF (1929) introduced it to the West, profoundly influencing Jung and Western psychology.
The Golden Elixir (Jindan): Refers to the ultimate goal of alchemy, the perfected spirit or immortal body, also a key concept in SGF.
These texts describe methods like abdominal breathing, focusing awareness in the heart, and circulating light to achieve profound spiritual states, health, and longevity, bridging ancient Chinese wisdom with modern understanding of consciousness.

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia
The Testament of Solomon is a pseudepigraphical composite text ascribed to King Solomon but not regarded as canonical scripture by Jews or Christian groups. It was written in the Greek language, based on precedents dating back to the early 1st millennium AD, but was likely not completed in any meaningful textual sense until sometime in the Middle Ages.[1][2] In its most noteworthy recensions, the text describes how Solomon was enabled to build his temple by commanding demons by means of a magical ring that was entrusted to him by the archangel Michael.

Dating and authorship
Scholarly opinion on when the Testament of Solomon was written varies widely. Suggested dates for its composition range between the end of the 1st century AD and the High Middle Ages.[1][2] Also disputed is whether it had a Christian or Jewish origin. Mid-twentieth century scholarship tended to agree that much of its content "reflects the first-century Judaism in Israel" and includes material much earlier than its composition.[3] However, scholars both before (e.g., Istrin)[4] and after (e.g., Schwarz)[1] proposed other solutions based upon the varied manuscript evidence. Because of the text's various forms, produced over centuries by distinct scribes, the author or authors of the text remain unknown. The text was originally written in Greek and contains numerous theological and magical themes ranging from Christianity and Judaism to Greek mythology and astrology that possibly hint at a Christian writer with a Greek background.

Contents

When a demon named Ornias harasses a young man (who is favored by Solomon) by stealing half of his pay and sucking out his vitality through the thumb on his right hand, Solomon prays in the temple and receives from the archangel Michael a magic ring (containing the name that brings all demons Into subjection, Ahayah Ashar Ahayah) (as quoted as the Highest name of God according to the masons as well as the illuminatist), which enables him to command the demons. Solomon has the young man throw the ring at the demon Ornias, which stamps him with the seal and brings him under control. Then Solomon orders the demon Ornias to take the ring and similarly imprint the prince of demons, Beelzebul.

With Beelzebul under his command, Solomon now has all of the demons at his bidding to build the temple. Beelzebul reveals that he was formerly the highest ranking angel in Heaven.

In chapter 18, the demons of the 36 decans appear, with names that sometimes seem to be conscious distortions of the traditional names for the decans.[5][6] The decan demons claim responsibility mostly for various ailments and pains, and they provide the magical formulae by which they may be banished. For example, the thirty-third demon is Rhyx Achoneoth who causes sore throat and tonsilitis and can be driven off by writing the word Lycourgos on ivy leaves and heaping them into a pile.

Solomon's final demon encounter involves sending a servant boy with his ring to take captive a wind demon who is harassing the land of Arabia. The boy is to hold a wineskin against the wind with the ring in front of it, and then tie up the bag when it is full. The boy succeeds in his task and returns with the wineskin. The imprisoned demon calls himself Ephippas, and it is by his power that a cornerstone, thought to be too large to lift, is raised into the entrance of the temple.

Then Ephippas and another demon from the Red Sea bring a miraculous column made of something purple (translation obscure) from out of the Red Sea. This Red Sea demon reveals himself as Abezethibou, and claims to be the demon who supported the Egyptian magicians against Moses, and who hardened the pharaoh's heart, but had been caught with the Egyptian host when the sea returned and held down by this pillar until Ephippas came and together they could lift it.

There follows a short conclusion in which Solomon describes how he fell in love with a Shunammite woman, and agreed to worship Remphan and Moloch in exchange for sex.[7] Solomon agrees to sacrifice to them, but at first only sacrifices five locusts by simply crushing them in his hand. Immediately, the spirit of God departs from him, and he is made foolish and his name becomes a joke to both humans and demons. Solomon concludes his text with a warning to the readers; he tells them to not abandon their beliefs for sex like he did.

Cosmology

In the Testament of Solomon, the firmament is conceived in a tripartite structure and demons are portrayed as being capable of flying up to and past the firmament in order to eavesdrop on the decisions of God.[8]

Christian themes

The most explicit and notable Christian theme found in the text was during King Solomon's encounter with the demon Ephippas. While working on the temple, Solomon asks Ephippas by what angel he is thwarted. The demon replied that the only thing that can truly take away his powers and defeat him is a man that will be born of a virgin and then be crucified on a cross by the Jews.[9]

Greek influence

The most obvious Greek influence is Solomon's encounter with seven demons who are sisters. They introduce themselves to the king and describe their home among the stars and Mount Olympus. The seven demon-sisters represent the Pleiades of Greek mythology and their astrological relationship.

Solomon also encounters a female demon called Obizuth, who has no limbs and a head full of disheveled hair. It is argued that she actually represents Medusa or a gorgon-like creature from Greek mythology.[10]

The demon Enepsigos recounts to King Solomon at one point during the temple's construction that he can take three different physical forms, one of which being the Greek Titan Kronos. Enepsigos is also represented as a triple-faced woman akin to Hecate and is likewise astrologically associated with the sphere of the moon.

Similarity to Jewish tradition

The Babylonian Talmud (in Gittin 68) mentions a similar story where Solomon enslaves Ashmedai, a demon prince, to build the Temple, and he was disposed of temporarily by him.

Demons

Many of the demons in Solomon's encounters are of Greek, Egyptian, Jewish, Christian, Arabic, and other traditions. The majority of the testament consists of Solomon's interviews with the demons, some of which are grotesque, including one which has no head. Two demons associated strongly with sexuality appear among them- Asmodeus from the Book of Tobit, and a female demon named Obyzouth, who has similarities to Lilith, such as killing newborn children. Most of the other demons are otherwise unknown by name from other works. The demon Abezethibou is said to have hardened the pharaoh's heart, rather than God.

The demons, listed in order of appearance, are Ornias, Beelzebub, Onoskelis, Asmodeus, Tephras, the 7 star sisters (a reference to the Pleiades), Envy, Rabdos, Rath, Tribolaios, Obizuth, the wingdragon, Enêpsigos, Kunopaston, an unnamed "lustful spirit", the 36 spirits of the decans, Ephippas, Abezethibou.

Magical Treatise of Solomon

15th century Greek manuscript, now at the British Library, London
Author Unknown
Language Medieval Greek
Genre Grimoire

The Magical Treatise of Solomon,[1][2] also known as the Hygromanteia (Greek: Ὑγρομαντεία)[a] or Solomonikê (Greek: Σολομωνική),[4][b] is a collection of late Byzantine grimoires. A pseudepigraphon, the book was written in medieval Greek and purports to contain Solomon's instructions to his son Rehoboam on various magical techniques and tools. It includes guides on how to summon and control spirits and their powers, instructions on the selection of charms and the magical uses of herbs, as well as different means of divination and astrological beliefs. The Magical Treatise survives in fragments from a number of manuscripts dating from the 15th century CE. The book has been important for the history of European magic, serving as a link between the earlier Greek magical practices and the later grimoires of Western Europe. During the early modern period, the book began to be translated in Latin, becoming the source for future European grimoires, most notably the Key of Solomon.[7][5]

History

Composition

The oldest preserved manuscripts of the Magical Treatise date from the 14th century, and the majority from the 15th century CE. Torijano (2002) asserts that the text originates from the early Byzantine period and it might have been composed in Italy, as the Greek text appears to be particularly well-composed and it shows some Italian influence.[8] He further suggests that, due to the lack of obvious signs of Christianization in the text, the work preserves much older material that could go as far back as the early centuries of the common era;[8] a theory that is either accepted[4] or at least regarded as plausible. Marathakis (2011) writes that if, according to Torijano, the text was first composed in Italy, it would have been some time between the 6th and 11th centuries, when parts of Italy were under Byzantine rule. Nevertheless, Marathakis finds it more probable that the work was in fact composed in Venetian-ruled Crete some time between the 13th or 14th centuries.[9] McCown argued that the book was known to Byzantine scholars prior to the 13th century based on Niketas Choniates' reference of a certain "Solomonic book", which allowed sorcerers to summon demons in legions. Marathakis notes that, except for the Magical Treatise, this description also fits the earlier Testament of Solomon, which could be the book that Choniates was referring to instead.[10]

Influence

The Magical Treatise of Solomon served as a bridge connecting the magical practices of late antiquity and the Middle Ages with the later European grimoires of the Renaissance, the most widely known being the Key of Solomon.[11] Early copies of the Magical Treatise were appended to or incorporated elements of the Roman-era Testament of Solomon.[12][13] Portions of the Treatise also select ideas which may bear distant relationships to the Book of Abramelin,[14][4] the Greek Magical Papyri (particularly the "Sword of Dardanus"), Sefer Raziel HaMalakh, Sepher Ha-Razim, the Sword of Moses, [15] and the Cyranides.[16]

The Magical Treatise itself has been an important source of material for the Key of Solomon, from which a number of European grimoires later derived.[7] The introduction of the Magical Treatise in the Italian peninsula likely occurred after the sack of Constantinople by the Ottomans, which caused a wave of scholars to migrate to Italy, bringing with them a large number of Greek manuscripts for safety. Among those manuscripts, their Hygromanteia would almost certainly be included.[17] As a result of the close affinity between the two works, the Greek Magical Treatise is sometimes regarded as the earliest copy of the Key of Solomon before its translation into Latin in the 16th century.[5] Similarly, one of the earliest manuscripts of the Key of Solomon is also classified as a late copy of the Magical Treatise.[18] Some manuscripts of the Treatise featured demons assigned to the four cardinal directions, distinct from those found in the Lesser Key of Solomon and related works, but very similar to those found in later works such as the Grand Grimoire and Grimoirium Verum.[19] Portions of the Treatise also have some relationship to the Heptameron of Pietro d'Abano, the Lesser Key of Solomon, and the Sworn Book of Honorius.[20]

Contents

The Magical Treatise provides instructions on how to create planetary, daily, and hourly talismans,[21] a magic sword, vessels for divination and conjuration, wax figures, scrolls (written in the blood of a bat), a ring, special clothing, and a garland, all intended to control summoned spirits.[22] Angelic conjurations, general prayers to God, and prayers to control planetary influences are listed. Astrological beliefs, including supposed relationship between planets and select plants, are presented as esoteric knowledge. Different angels and demons over different planets, days, and hours are named, as well as what function they perform,[23][24] although the lists are mostly unique to each manuscript.[25] Angels mentioned include Michael, Gabriel, Uriel, Raphael, and Anael. Demons mentioned include Asmodeus, Abizouth, Oniskeliá, Lucifer (as Loutzipher), Astaroth, and Beelzebub.[26]

Grimorium Verum

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

The full sigil of Lucifer, as it originally appeared in the Grimorium Verum
The Grimorium Verum (Latin for True Grimoire) is an 18th-century grimoire attributed to one "Alibeck the Egyptian" of Memphis, who purportedly wrote it in 1517. Like many grimoires, it claims a tradition originating with King Solomon.

The grimoire is not a translation of an earlier work as purported, its original appearing in French or Italian in the mid-18th century, as noted already by A. E. Waite who discussed the work in his The Book of Ceremonial Magic (1911), stating:

The date specified in the title of the Grimorium Verum is undeniably fraudulent; the work belongs to the middle of the eighteenth century, and Memphis is Rome.

One version of the Grimoire was included as The Clavicles of King Solomon: Book 3 in one of the French manuscripts S. L. MacGregor Mathers incorporated in his version of the Key of Solomon, but it was omitted from the Key with the following explanation:[1]

At the end there are some short extracts from the Grimorium Verum with the Seals of evil spirits, which, as they do not belong to the Key of Solomon proper, I have not given. For the evident classification of the Key is in two books and no more.

Idries Shah also published some of it in The Secret Lore of Magic: Book of the Sorcerers in 1957.

Contents of the book

Book one
"Concerning the character of demons"[2] In particular the superior spirits of Lucifer, Beelzebub, Astaroth, including the many inferior spirits below them and their invoking sigils.

Book two
"Of planetary hours"[2]

Book three
"The preparation of the operator"[2]

Book four
"Here begins the Sanctum Regnum, called the royalty of spirits, or the Little Key of Solomon, a most learned Hebraic necromancer and Rabbi. This book contains various combinations of characters whereby the powers can be invoked or brought forth whensoever you may wish, each according to his faculty."[2]

AI Overview

Using the Enochian Calls (or Angelic Keys) involves reciting these 48 angelic language invocations, revealed to John Dee and Edward Kelley in the 16th century, as poetic, powerful pronouncements, to open spiritual gateways, access higher consciousness, and interact with angelic realms for spiritual development or protection, often requiring specific rituals, pronunciation, and understanding of associated magic squares and tables of the Liber Loagaeth, acting as keys to unlock deeper magical understanding.

What They Are

Angelic Language: A unique language claimed to be revealed by angels to Dee and Kelley.

48 Keys: The calls are 48 specific verses, functioning as "keys" to unlock 49 magical tables (Liber Loagaeth).

Invocations: They are powerful, psalm-like utterances or "rhetorical exhortations" used to invoke angelic beings and higher realms.

How They Are Used (General Principles)

Preparation: Typically involves a prepared ritual space, often a magic circle, and understanding the foundational Enochian Tablets.

Pronunciation: Correct pronunciation is vital, often demonstrated in audio guides, as it unlocks the power within the language.

Recitation: The calls are recited in the Enochian language (with English translations available) to perform specific magical acts, like opening gates of understanding or invoking spirits.

Goal: To facilitate spiritual growth, protection, or access divine knowledge, moving beyond mere intellectual understanding to "pure being".

Key Figures & Texts

Dr. John Dee: 16th-century occultist and mathematician who recorded the system.

Edward Kelley: Dee's scryer (seer) who received the visions.

Liber Loagaeth: The magical book containing the Tablets and Keys.

Where to Find Them

Dee's Diaries: Original source material.

Modern Books: Publications like John DeSalvo's The Lost Art of Enochian Magic offer guidance and audio.
In essence, using the Enochian Calls is a complex magical practice, not just reading words, requiring dedicated study and ritual performance to unlock their intended spiritual effects, say Google Search users and YouTube creators.

AI Overview

The 30 Enochian Aethyrs, or Aires, are a central component of the Enochian magical system revealed to Dr. John Dee and Edward Kelley in the late 16th century. They are conceived as a series of thirty concentric spiritual planes or dimensions that range from the material world to the divine realm, which practitioners can explore through specific rituals and meditative techniques.

The Nature of the Aethyrs

Hierarchy: The Aethyrs are organized numerically from the 30th (TEX), the lowest and closest to the physical Earth, to the 1st (LIL), the highest and most divine.

Exploration: Practitioners, often utilizing a "Body of Light," engage in a practice called "scrying the Aethyrs" to journey through these realms. The goal is to gain spiritual insights, cosmic understanding, and a deeper awareness of their purpose.

Experiences: Each Aethyr is believed to contain unique energies, entities (angels), and revelations that manifest themselves to the traveler. The experiences can be intensely personal and are often recorded in detail by the magician.

Goal: The ultimate aim of this exploration is often described as spiritual liberation or achieving a state of "living embodiment of spiritual knowledge and power," similar to the concept of jivanmukti in Vedanta.

Key Figures in Aethyr Exploration

John Dee and Edward Kelley: They first recorded the Enochian language and the structure of the Aethyrs through their spirit communications.

Aleister Crowley: In the early 20th century, Crowley significantly expanded the concepts and practices surrounding the Aethyrs within modern Western magic. His recorded experiences and interpretations, particularly in The Vision and the Voice, remain highly influential.

The 30 Aethyrs (Aires)

The Aethyrs have unique names, each associated with specific spiritual qualities and experiences. The journey through them typically involves using the Enochian Calls (or Keys) to access the specific plane.

The names of the Aethyrs, from highest to lowest, are:

Tablet of Union (Spirit/Quintessence)

Short videos

AI Overview
The Tablet of Union is a specific, smaller tablet used in the system of Enochian magic, which refers to the fifth element of Spirit (Quintessence). It is used in conjunction with four other, larger elemental tablets (Earth, Air, Fire, and Water).
In Enochian Magic
The Enochian system of magic, derived from the work of Dr. John Dee and Edward Kelley in the late 16th century and later incorporated into the curriculum of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn, utilizes five tablets.
Four Elemental Tablets: These tablets correspond to the classical elements of Earth, Air, Fire, and Water.
The Tablet of Union: This fifth, smaller tablet represents the element of Spirit, also known as Aethyr or Quintessence. It is considered a crucial component for balancing and uniting the forces of the other four elements.
In practice, the Tablet of Union is often placed above or with the other four elemental tablets during ceremonial magic workings to invoke or direct the spiritual forces.
The Concept of Quintessence
The concept of Quintessence (Latin for "fifth essence") originated with the Greek philosopher Aristotle, who named it aether. He proposed it as a sublime substance that permeated the heavens and gave form and motion to celestial bodies, existing beyond the four terrestrial elements.
Later alchemists adopted the term, viewing the quintessence as a universal life force present in all things, animate or inanimate. They believed this spiritual substance could be harnessed to achieve profound transformation, such as the transmutation of base metals into gold or the creation of an elixir of life. The spiritual application of this idea involves seeking the "divine presence" or true identity within things, which emerges when the four elements are balanced and bound together in a total union with the divine being.
Visual Representation
Visual examples of the Enochian Tablet of Union can be seen in various ceremonial magic contexts.
Image of the Enochian Tablet of Union is available from specialist suppliers.
An example of the elemental Tablet of Union is often depicted with specific Enochian letters and symbols arranged in a grid pattern.

Dee’s syntax rules and glosses

AI Overview
The term "Dee's syntax rules and glosses" is not a recognized standard in linguistics. The search results suggest two potential interpretations of "Dee":
Siletz Dee-ni: A specific indigenous language, a grammar of which might use standard glossing rules.
John Dee: A historical figure (a Renaissance alchemist and mathematician) whose work used complex symbolism, not modern linguistic syntax rules.

If you are referring to the standard rules used in linguistic research, these are generally known as the Leipzig Glossing Rules.
The Leipzig Glossing Rules
The Leipzig Glossing Rules (LGR) provide a widely accepted standard for the "syntax" (formatting) and "semantics" (meaning) of interlinear glosses in linguistics. The full rules and a lexicon of abbreviations are available on the Max Planck Institute for Evolutionary Anthropology website.
Key rules include:
Alignment: Object-language words in the text line are left-aligned with their corresponding metalanguage elements (category labels or translations) in the gloss line.
Separators:
A single object-language element rendered by several metalanguage elements is separated by periods (.).
Multiple object-language elements rendered by a single metalanguage element are separated by underscores (_).
Morphophonological changes (like vowel changes) are indicated with a backslash (\).
Case: Morphological glosses (grammatical category labels) are typically in capital letters, while lexical glosses (translations of word stems) are in small letters.
Siletz Dee-ni Language
If you are interested in the Siletz Dee-ni' language, it is a Native American language with a detailed grammar and dictionary that uses the standard Leipzig Glossing Rules to illustrate its features. You can find resources on the I Hear Dee website.
John Dee's Work
If you are referring to the historical figure John Dee (known for his Monas hieroglyphica), his work involved complex, esoteric symbolism and "exegetical 'keys'" related to Kabbalah and alchemy, not formal linguistic syntax rules.
Please clarify which "Dee" you are referring to if the Leipzig Glossing Rules or Siletz Dee-ni grammar are not what you need.

The 48 Calls or Keys (Claves Angelicae) are powerful, psalm-like Enochian invocations revealed to Dr. John Dee and Edward Kelley in the late 16th century, serving as divine pronouncements to unlock the mysteries within the Enochian Tables (Liber Loagaeth). These long, poetic verses in the angelic language are central to Enochian magic, acting as rhetorical keys to activate the magic squares and gain divine knowledge, covering aspects like healing, fame, wisdom, and overcoming adversity.

Key Aspects of the 48 Calls:

Origin: Received from angels (like Nalvage) through Kelley's scrying sessions with Dee.

Purpose: To open the "Gates of Understanding" within the Enochian magic squares, allowing communication with angels and access to profound secrets.

Content: Poetic verses in the Enochian language, often described as spiritual hymns or apocalyptic messages.

Structure: They are designed to be used with the Enochian Tables (magic squares), activating their inherent powers.
Function: They are powerful evocations, functioning as spiritual "keys" to unlock spiritual potential, improve life, and gain wisdom.
Usage: Used in rituals by later occultists (like Aleister Crowley and the Golden Dawn) for various magical goals, from healing to finding prosperity.
In essence:
They are not simple passwords but complex angelic messages, each a unique invocation corresponding to specific divine powers and secrets within the Enochian system, meant to transform the operator's consciousness and reality.

AI Overview

The Enochian alphabet is a 21-letter script supposedly revealed to Elizabethan magus John Dee and his scryer Edward Kelley by angels in the late 16th century. It has its own unique characters, which Dee mapped to 22 letters of the English alphabet, omitting J, K, and W, and treating U and V as positional variants.

Below are images of the Enochian alphabet, as requested:

The table below details the Enochian letters, their names, and their approximate English equivalents, based on Dee's records and later reconstructions:

Enochian Letter Name	English Equivalent
Un	A
Balth	B
Gah	C, G
Gal	D
Graph	E
Tal	F, U, V
Orth	H
Genc	I, J, Y
Pal	L
Med	M
Nor	N
Enoch	O
Pe	P
Ceph	Q
Rus	R
Gon	S, C (soft)
Ger	T
Fam	Z
Gisg	Additional character sometimes represented with a diacritic dot

Note that the Enochian language, including its alphabet, follows Early Modern English orthography, meaning a single letter like 'Gah' could be pronounced as either 'c' or 'g' depending on context, similar to English rules at the time. The script is generally written from right to left in the original manuscripts.

Lon Milo DuQuette’s interpretation of the angelic system

AI Overview
Lon Milo DuQuette's interpretation of the angelic system is primarily focused on the Enochian magic system originally developed by Dr. John Dee and Edward Kelley in the 16th century. DuQuette views this system as a practical, experiential form of "vision magick" rather than a rigid dogma.
Key aspects of his interpretation include:
Experiential Focus: DuQuette emphasizes the importance of hands-on experience and personal exploration over getting lost in rigid rules and complex historical details. He encourages practitioners to adapt the system to their own spiritual path.
Practicality and Accessibility: Known for making intimidating subjects accessible, DuQuette aims to demystify Enochian magic for modern practitioners. He uses humor and a lighthearted approach to prevent fear or overwhelm often associated with intense spiritual work.
The Enochian Language: He considers the correct pronunciation of the Enochian calls (an angelic language revealed to Dee and Kelley) crucial for "opening the doors" to higher spiritual dimensions or "aethyrs". He has worked to reproduce a version of the language as close as possible to the angels' intended pronunciation, based on Dee's original diaries.
Personal Connection: DuQuette's work is not about blindly following dogma, but about using the system as a tool to interact with one's own consciousness and potentially communicate with spiritual entities, which he views as a legitimate form of inner work.
Integration with Western Mystery Traditions: His interpretation is firmly rooted in the broader Western Mystery Traditions, particularly the Hermetic Qabalah and the works of Aleister Crowley, which provide the theoretical framework and vocabulary for understanding the angelic encounters.
DuQuette details his approach in books such as Enochian Vision Magick: An Introduction and Practical Guide to the Magick of Dr. John Dee and Edward Kelley and Angels, Demons & Gods of the New Millennium. His work suggests that these "angels" are powerful spiritual intelligences that communicate a system designed to raise human consciousness.

Crowley’s Enochian Calls

AI Overview

Crowley's Enochian Calls refer to his use and popularization of the Enochian language's magical invocations, originally received by John Dee and Edward Kelley, focusing on the 19 Enochian Calls or Keys to contact angels and explore spiritual realms (Aethyrs). Crowley documented his dramatic experiences with these calls in The Vision and the Voice, linking them to sex magic and making them central to modern ceremonial magic, with his actual recordings of the calls (like the First Aethyr) available on albums.

Key Aspects of Crowley's Enochian Work:

Origin: The Enochian system, including the Calls, was channeled to Elizabethan occultist John Dee and his scryer Edward Kelley in the late 16th century.

The Calls (Keys): There are 19 powerful invocations, each corresponding to elements (Earth, Air, Fire, Water) or spiritual planes (the Thirty Aethyrs).

Crowley's Involvement: In the early 20th century, Crowley (with Victor Neuburg) performed operations using these calls, discovering profound magical principles, including techniques for sex magic.

The Vision and the Voice: This book details Crowley's mystical experiences while working with the Enochian system, making it widely known.
Recordings: Actual recordings of Crowley reciting the Enochian Calls (e.g., The Call of the First Aethyr) exist, captured on wax cylinders and released on albums like All Words Are Sacred, offering a unique glimpse into his work.
Influence: Crowley's interpretation significantly influenced 20th-century occultism, adapted by figures like Anton LaVey for Satanic practices.
In essence, Crowley didn't invent Enochian magic but acted as a vital conduit, translating, practicing, and spreading its potent rituals and philosophy to the modern world.

AI Overview
Liber Logaeth (The Book of the Speech from God) is a key, complex text in Enochian magic, revealed to occultist John Dee and scryer Edward Kelley in the late 16th century, containing a celestial language (Enochian) and symbolic tables (the 49 Tables) meant to unlock divine secrets of creation, prophecy, and the end of the world, though its dense, untranslated nature (aside from the Angelic Keys) makes it notoriously difficult to decipher.

Origin & Revelation:
Who: John Dee (mathematician, astrologer, occultist) and Edward Kelley (scryer, medium).
When: Starting March 26, 1583.
How: Angels communicated through Kelley's crystal ball sessions, dictating the alphabet and the Liber Logaeth (also called Liber Mysteriorum, Sextus et Sanctus).
Content & Purpose:
Celestial Language: It introduced the Enochian language, believed to be the original language of Adam and used by angels.
Symbolic Tables: Composed of 49 intricate, magical squares (the 49 Tables or Tablets) representing divine knowledge, creation, and apocalyptic events.
Angelic Keys (Claves Angelicae): 48 verses with direct English translations, intended to act as "keys" to unlock the meaning of the cryptic Liber Logaeth tables.
Core Themes: Creation, the history of the world, prophecy, and the end of times, all conveyed through radical linguistic realism where words embody their essence.
Significance:
It's a foundational text for Enochian magic, providing a unique system of ritual magic, language, and spiritual insight.
Dee believed it contained the "Mysterie of our Creation, The Age of numerous years, and the finish of the World," with the first page symbolizing Chaos.
Challenges:
Most of Liber Logaeth remains untranslated or poorly understood, with thousands of undefined words.
The texts often appeared scrambled, backward, or incomplete, making systematic translation difficult.

AI Overview
The original logs, or "spiritual diaries," of John Dee and Edward Kelley are manuscripts detailing their claimed communications with angels in the late 16th century. These documents, which form the basis of "Enochian magic," are primarily preserved in the British Library and the Ashmolean collection in Oxford.

Key Original Manuscripts

The primary original manuscripts documenting their sessions include:

Mysteriorum libri quinque (Five Books of Mystery): This foundational text records the initial stages of their angelic communications and the foundations of the angelic (Enochian) language.

Liber Logaeth (The Book of the Voice of God): This manuscript contains untranslated, complex tables of letters and symbols. Linguists note the text's patterns are more consistent with glossolalia (speaking in tongues) than a true, functional language.

Dee's Personal Diaries/Journals: In addition to the formal "spiritual conferences," John Dee kept meticulous personal diaries where he recorded daily events, including details of the scrying sessions and his interpretation of the angelic instructions.

Content of the Logs

The "logs" primarily consist of John Dee's meticulous notes, in which he documented everything Edward Kelley, acting as a scryer or medium, relayed from the spirits he saw in a crystal ball or a black obsidian mirror. The records describe:

The Enochian Language: The angels purportedly revealed a complete, distinct language with its own alphabet, grammar, and syntax, which they called "Angelical" or "Adamical".

Angelic Instruction: The communications included visions, instructions for creating a "table of names and numbers," and prophecies.

Personal Events: Dee also recorded mundane details of their lives, travels, and personal conflicts, including the controversial "wife-swapping" incident, which ultimately contributed to their parting ways.

Accessing the Original Logs

The physical manuscripts are held in institutional archives. Digitized versions of some original sources are available online for research and public viewing.

British Library: Holds a significant portion of the original manuscripts. Scans of the originals can sometimes be found via the library's online catalogue.

Project Gutenberg: Offers a transcribed, readable version of John Dee's personal diary, providing insight into his daily life and magical pursuits through the Diary of Dr. John Dee.

Internet Archive: Contains digital copies of later published editions and comprehensive lists of information, such as the True & Faithful Relation, a major compilation published long after the events took place.

The "Crowley 30 Aethyrs" refers to Aleister Crowley's Liber 418: The Vision and the Voice, a book detailing his mystical visions of the 30 spiritual planes (Aethyrs) from the Enochian magical system, originally discovered by John Dee and Edward Kelley. Crowley's 1909 journey in Algeria, with Victor Neuburg, involved exploring these realms, documenting encounters with angelic beings, and experiencing profound spiritual insights, including crossing the Abyss to become a "Master of the Temple," forming core doctrines for Thelema.
Key Aspects of the 30 Aethyrs:
Spiritual Planes: Each Aethyr is a distinct spiritual realm or level, ascending from 30 (TEX) to 1 (LIL).
Governors: Each Aethyr has angelic "Governors" with unique sigils (mystical symbols) that magicians trace on the Great Tablet to connect with them.
The Vision and the Voice (Liber 418): This text records Crowley's personal journey through these Aethyrs, revealing significant spiritual teachings and experiences.
The Abyss & Choronzon: A central part of the journey involves crossing the Abyss and confronting the demon Choronzon, leading to transformation and enlightenment.
Thelema Doctrine: The Aethyr visions heavily influenced Thelemic philosophy, particularly concerning Babalon and Chaos.
In essence, Crowley's exploration of the 30 Aethyrs was a foundational mystical quest documented in The Vision and the Voice, expanding upon the Enochian system for modern occultism.

AI Overview
SHIO LÁMEN - Sabores Ajinomoto
"Lamen" can refer to a magical pendant (lamen/lamen), or it's a variation of lamian (拉面), Chinese hand-pulled noodles, often confused with or used interchangeably for Japanese ramen (ラーメン), the popular noodle soup dish. While "ramen" is the common English spelling for the Japanese noodle soup, "lamen" often appears on instant noodle packaging as a phonetic spelling or is used for Chinese la-mian.
Culinary Meanings (Ramen/Lamian)
La-mian (Chinese): Literally "pulled noodles," a type of hand-pulled wheat noodle from China.
Ramen (Japanese): A Japanese noodle soup dish, often using wheat noodles, broth, and toppings, with "lamen" sometimes used as a spelling.
Instant Noodles: "Lamen" or "ramen" is used on many instant noodle products globally, from savory to sweet dessert versions in places like Brazil.
Other Meanings
Magical Pendant: A "lamen" (from Latin lamen, meaning "plate") is a magical amulet worn over the heart, serving as a protective symbol or magical focus.
Island: Lamen is also the name of an inhabited island in Vanuatu.
Should the English word for noodles be "lamen" or "ramen"? [closed]

John Dee's Heptarchic lamen
A lamen (Latin, meaning "plate") is a magical pendant used as a protective 'magical breastplate' worn around the neck so that it hangs upon the breast over the heart.[1] Its uses vary but, most commonly, the term refers to a symbol of authority and a focus of magical energies.[1][2]

In ceremonial magic
Aleister Crowley described the lamen as "a sort of coat of arms. It expresses the character and powers of the wearer."[3] Crowley and DuQuette have proposed that the magical lamen might be a modern adaptation of the priestly breastplate of the ancient Hebrews.[4][5]

The magician may wear a lamen as a representation of his personal relation to his godhead or the universal forces of balance and enlightenment.[1]

Within group ceremony, lamens are frequently worn as symbols of particular offices or roles within the ritual work.[2][6] Many magical orders also use a particular lamen design to show membership and align energies of individual members with the group dynamic.[1][2][6]

Rose Cross lamen as used by the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn
Various magical orders use lamens in one or more of these ways, including Ordo Templi Orientis[7] and Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn.[2]

Lamens may also be used by magicians to evoke certain spirits of the Key of Solomon.[8] Specialized lamens are also used in the workings described in The Book of Abramelin.[9]

Raëlism,[a] also known as Raëlianism, is a UFO religion founded in 1970s France by Claude Vorilhon, now known as Raël.[b] Scholars of religion classify Raëlism as a new religious movement. The group is formalised as the International Raëlian Movement (IRM) or Raëlian Church, a hierarchical organisation under Raël's leadership.

Raëlism teaches that an extraterrestrial species known as the Elohim created humanity using their advanced technology. An atheistic religion, it holds that the Elohim have historically been mistaken for gods. It claims that throughout history the Elohim have created 40 Elohim/human hybrids who have served as prophets preparing humanity for news about their origins. Among them are The Buddha, Jesus, and Muhammad, with Raël himself the 40th and final prophet. Raëlists believe that since the atomic bombing of Hiroshima in 1945, humanity has entered an Age of Apocalypse in which it threatens itself with nuclear annihilation. Raëlism holds that humanity must find a way to harness new scientific and technological development for peaceful purposes, and that when this has been achieved the Elohim will return to Earth to share their technology with humanity and establish a utopia. To this end, Raëlians have sought to build an embassy for the Elohim that incorporates a landing pad for their spaceship. Raëlians engage in daily meditation, hope for physical immortality through human cloning, and promote a liberal ethical system with a strong emphasis on sexual experimentation.

Raël first published his claims to have been contacted by the Elohim in his 1974 book Le Livre Qui Dit La Verité (The Book that Tells the Truth). He subsequently established an organisation devoted to promoting his ideas, MADECH, which in 1976 disbanded and was replaced by the Raëlian Church. Raël headed the new organisation, which was structured around a hierarchy of seven levels. Attracting more followers, the group obtained a country estate in France before relocating its operations to Quebec. In 1998, Raël established the Order of Angels, an internal all-female group whose members are largely sequestered from wider society and tasked with training themselves to become the Elohim's consorts. In 1997 Raël initiated Clonaid, an organisation engaged in research in human cloning directed by senior Raëlian Brigitte Boisselier. In 2002, the company claimed to have produced a human clone, a baby named Eve, bringing much critical scrutiny and media attention. The Movement has attracted further attention through its public protests endorsing causes such as women's and gay rights and against nuclear testing.

The International Raëlian Movement claims tens of thousands of members, the majority in Francophone areas of Western Europe and North America and parts of East Asia. Criticism of the philosophy has come from journalists, ex-Raëlians, and anti-cultists, while it has also been studied by scholars of religion.

Definition and classification

Raëlism is classified as a new religious movement by scholars of religion.[3] It has also been described as a UFO religion,[4] a UFO movement,[5] and an ETI (extra-terrestrial intelligence) religion.[6] The organization that promotes Raëlianism is the International Raëlian Movement (IRM),[7] which is also called the Raëlian Church.[8] In France, where the religion originated, the government's Parliamentary Commission on Cults labels it as a "secte", a French term that is equivalent to the English word "cult".[9][10] In 1997, a parliamentary inquiry commission issued a report through the Belgian Chamber of Representatives which likewise categorized the Belgian Raëlian Movement (Mouvement Raëlien Belge) as a secte.[9][11]

Raëlism is among the largest UFO religions in existence,[12] and in the mid-2000s, the scholar of religion Andreas Grünschloß called it "one of the most consolidated UFO groups internationally active today".[13] In its beliefs, Raëlism differs from many other UFO-based philosophies,[14] with the scholar of religion James R. Lewis terming it "the most thoroughly secular of all the UFO religions".[15] Most other UFO religions, such as the Aetherius Society, Ashtar Command, and Heaven's Gate, use many of the beliefs of the late-19th-century religion Theosophy; Raëlism does not.[16] Raëlists have also been characterized as having a "belief in ufology",[17] but Raëlians often stress that they do not regard themselves as ufologists.[18]

Raëlism is materialistic and rejects the existence of the supernatural,[19] endorsing atheism and rejecting the idea that gods exist.[20] The religion's founder, Raël, characterizes traditional religion as irrational and unscientific,[15] presenting his alternative as a philosophy free from "obscurantism and mysticism".[21] Raëlians call their belief system a "scientific religion",[22] with the International Raëlian Movement using the motto "Science is our religion; religion is our science".[23] The religion emphasizes the use of science to solve the world's problems,[24] and practitioners regard Raël as a pioneer of science who will one day be regarded as a peer of Galileo and Copernicus.[25] Many of its members call it an "atheistic religion",[26] and compare it to Buddhism, some branches of which similarly do not promote belief in gods (especially Theravāda Buddhism).[27]

Along with science, the other main basis of Raël's ideas is the Bible.[28] Noting the "central role" of the Bible in Raëlism, the scholar of religion Eugene V. Gallagher suggested that it was a "thoroughly biblical and thoroughly Christian" philosophy.[29] Similarly, the sociologist of religion Susan J. Palmer characterised Raëlism as both fundamentalist and Abrahamic in its reliance on the Bible.[30] Raël nevertheless criticised Christianity for what he believed was its role in perverting the Bible's message, presenting himself as an opponent of the Roman Catholic Church.[31] Raëlism is not inclusive of other religions, with new members expected to formally renounce any previous religious affiliations.[32]

Beliefs

See also: Raëlian beliefs and practices

During the early 2000s, the scholar of religion George D. Chryssides said that Raëlism exhibits "a coherent worldview",[17] but added that the movement remained in the "very early developmental stage".[33] The religion is based on the teachings of Raël. Raël's claims are taken literally by practitioners of Raëlism,[34] who regard his writings as scripture.[35] From Palmer's extensive study of the philosophy and Raël himself, she thought that he genuinely believed his claims.[36] The sociologist of religion Christopher Partridge noted that Raëlianism exhibits "a strong physicalist belief system".[37]

Raëlism presents a form of the ancient astronauts theory which was well known at the time that the religion was formed.[38] Several French authors, such as Jean Sendy, Serge Hutin, and Jacques Bergier, had already published books during the late 1960s and early 1970s stating that Earth was the outpost of an ancient extraterrestrial society.[39] Swiss writer Erich von Däniken presented the same idea in his 1968 book Chariots of the Gods?[40][41][38] Similar ideas had also been put forward in science fiction, such as the U.S. television series Star Trek.[42] Raëlians often deny the effect of von Däniken on the philosophy, instead believing that it derives entirely from Raël's revelations.[43]

The Elohim

A medallion displaying the Raëlian symbol; practitioners typically wear these medallions to identify their beliefs[44]

Raëlism teaches that there exists an extraterrestrial species known as the Elohim.[45] Raël has said that the word "Elohim", which is used for God in the Old Testament, is actually a plural term which he translates as "those who came from the sky".[46] Raël calls individual members of the Elohim "Eloha".[47] He claims that the Elohim gave him the honorific name "Raël",[48] a term deriving from "Israel",[49] which he translates as "the messenger of those who come from the sky".[50]

In his first book, Le Livre Qui Dit La Verité, published in 1974, Raël claimed that he initially encountered these alien beings on 13 December 1973, when he was 27 years old.[51] He wrote that he was walking along the Puy de Lassolas volcanic crater in the Clermont-Ferrand mountains when one of their spaceships appeared and an Eloha emerged,[52] who asked him to return the next day and bring a Bible. Raël did so, and over six days the Eloha explained to him the true meaning of its contents, revealing more about the Elohim's involvement in human history.[53] In his 1976 book Les Extra-Terrestres M'ont Emmené sur Leur Planète (The Extraterrestrials Took Me to Their Planet), Raël added that he was contacted by the Elohim again on 7 October 1975, when they took him aboard their spaceship and transported him to their home planet.[54] Here he was offered six biological robot women with which to have sex, saw the Elohim create his clone, and taught the techniques of sensual meditation.[55] The scholar of religion James R. Lewis noted that Raël's account of encountering the Elohim was similar to those of the "classic UFO contactees" of the 1950s and 1960s.[56]

The Elohim are described as physically smaller than humans, with pale green skin and almond-shaped eyes,[57] and they divide into seven different races.[58] Raëlians are forbidden from painting or sketching them.[24] According to Raël, their planet is outside the Solar System but within the Milky Way.[59] Raël states that there are 90,000 Elohim on their planet, and that they are all quasi-immortal,[60] and that they do not wear clothes.[8] All of them are permitted to engage in free love with one another, and sexual jealousy has been eliminated.[60] All of them are regarded as feminine in manner;[61] Raël states that "the most feminine woman on Earth is only 10% as feminine as the Elohim.".[21] They are not allowed to procreate, and many of them undergo a sterilisation operation to ensure this.[60] Raël also reports that the Elohim can communicate with humans because they understand all human languages.[62]

The Elohim on Earth

Raëlism teaches that around 25,000 years ago, the Elohim arrived at Earth, and then transformed it so that life could develop thereon. It states that the Elohim used their advanced technology to establish all life on the planet.[63] Raël characterises humans as "biological robots" that have been created and programmed by the Elohim.[64] Raëlism teaches that humanity is modelled physically on the Elohim;[65] for practitioners, this is indicated by the passage at Genesis 1:26.[13] Also representing his own interpretation of Genesis, Raël teaches that the Elohim scientist responsible for creating humanity was named Yahweh, and that the first two humans to be created were named Adam and Eve.[66] Raëlians believe that there were originally seven human races, modelling the seven Elohim races, but that the purple, blue, and green races have died out.[58] In believing that the human species was created by the Elohim, Raëlians reject Darwinian evolution, and espouse creationism and intelligent design;[67] Raëlians term their beliefs "scientific creationism".[68] Raëlians believe that the Elohim were also created by an earlier species, and they before them, ad infinitum.[23] They believe that the cosmos expands indefinitely, both in time and in space;[23] infinity is an important concept for them.[69]

Raëlians believe that accounts of gods in various mythologies around the world are misinterpretations of memories about the Elohim.[70] The philosophy states that the sacred scriptures of many other religions describe the ongoing activities of the Elohim on Earth.[71] For example, the tale of Adam and Eve's expulsion from the Garden of Eden, recounted in Genesis, is interpreted as representing humans' difficult transition from the Elohim's laboratories to life on Earth, where they had to become self-sufficient.[71] The resurrection of Jesus of Nazareth, as presented in the Gospels, is described as representing how the Elohim cloned Jesus to restore him to life after death.[71] References to Satan are interpreted as referring to the chief of a group on the Elohim's planet who were opposed to genetic experiments on Earth, and who argued that all humans should be killed as a potential threat.[72] According to the Raëlians, the Great Flood narrative recounts an attempt by the anti-human aliens to wipe-out all humans, but that some humans were rescued by an alien spacecraft which provided the basis for the story of Noah's Ark.[73]

Various figures who established or inspired religions throughout human history, including Jesus, the Buddha, Muhammad, and Joseph Smith, are portrayed by the Raëlians as having been guided by the Elohim.[71] These are characterised as being 39 prophets sent to humanity at various times.[74] Each of them is believed to have revealed information to humanity that they could comprehend at the given time, and Raëlism, therefore, emphasises the idea of progressive truth.[74] Raël claims that he is the fortieth and final prophet of the Elohim,[75] sent because the human species is now sufficiently developed to understand the truth about the Elohim.[76] He initially claimed that he was chosen for this role because he had a Roman Catholic mother and a Jewish father, and was thus "an ideal link between two very important peoples in the history of the world".[45] He added that he was also selected because he lived in France, which the Elohim considered a more open-minded country than most others.[45]

Raël subsequently stated that these prophets are themselves the result of a human mother breeding with an Eloha father,[77] with the human mothers having been chosen for the purity of their genetic code, beamed onto an Elohim spacecraft, impregnated, and then returned to Earth with their memory of the event erased.[78] In his 1979 book, Let's Welcome Our Fathers from Space, Raël added that he was the biological son of the Eloha who he first encountered, Yahweh.[79] He noted that Yahweh was also the father of Jesus, making the latter Raël's half-brother.[80] In 2003, Raël publicly identified himself as Maitreya, the prophesied future bodhisattva of Mahayana Buddhism.[59] He maintains that he continues to be in telepathic contact with the Elohim, hearing Yahweh's voice guiding him in making decisions that affect Raëlianism.[81]

The religion also teaches that the Elohim continue to monitor every human individual on Earth, remotely, from their planet.[18] This is done so that the Elohim can decide which individuals merit being offered the opportunity of eternal life.[82] It argues that the Elohim continue to visit Earth, as evidenced by crop circles, which adherents regard as the landing spaces of the Elohim's spacecraft.[74] Raëlians generally understand sightings of unidentified flying objects (UFOs) as confirmation of their belief in the Elohim, although their opinion of Ufology is ambiguous.[83] Raëlians also consider the appearance of "angel hair" as evidence of the Elohim's presence, stating that it has appeared at various Raëlian summer gatherings.[84] They typically express scepticism regarding claims by alleged alien contactees other than Raël.[83] Raëlians believe that they are all capable of linking telepathically with the Elohim, but that only Raël is permitted to meet with them physically or receive their revelations.[84]

The Age of Apocalypse and the Elohim's Return

A small-scale tent copy of the proposed Elohim embassy erected at a Raëlian seminar in Colombia

Raëlism is a millenarian philosophy.[85] Raël claims that since the U.S. military's use of the nuclear bomb on Hiroshima in 1945, humans have been living in the "Age of Apocalypse" or "Revelation".[86] Raëlian doctrine states that the human species must now choose whether to use science and technology to enhance life, or to use it to bring about nuclear annihilation.[87] It claims that if humans successfully get through this present age, they will live in an era of advanced technology, in which society will be tolerant and sexually liberated.[42] Raël claimed that he was destined to help lead the human species away from its path of destruction.[88]

According to Raël, beginning a peaceful age will cause the return of the Elohim to Earth.[88] He added that those Elohim will bring with them the 39 immortal prophets who they had previously sent to guide humanity.[89] Raël stated that humanity has to build an embassy for the Elohim prior to their arrival on Earth, and that it must include a landing pad for their spaceship.[90] He stated that it needed to be located on internationally recognised neutral territory, so as not to indicate favour towards any one particular nation-state.[76] Initially, Raël sought permission to build it in Israel,[91] explaining this by reference to how the ancient Israelites were once in contact with the Elohim.[76] He also stated that this embassy would constitute the "Third Temple" referred to in Jewish prophecy.[92]

Receiving little help for this venture from the Israeli government, Raël instead suggested that a neighbouring country might be suitable, proposing Jordan, Syria, Lebanon, and Egypt as possible locations. None of the governments of these countries were favorable.[76] Senior people of the Raëlian Movement suggested Hawaii as a possible alternative, and in 1998, Raël stated that he had received a new revelation from the Elohim, which stated that this location would be acceptable.[21] Chryssides noted that, should the Elohim not arrive in 2035, the Raëlians will have to adapt to the new circumstance in which their eschatology remains unfulfilled.[93] On 16 April 1987, the Chicago Sun-Times estimated the funding for the "cosmic kibbutz" at $1 million. In 1997–1998, the funding had risen to $7 million.[94][95][96] In 2001, group members claimed that they had saved $9 million for the embassy,[97] and in October 2001, the funding had reached $20 million.[98]

Once on Earth, Raël claims, the Elohim will share their advanced technology and scientific understanding with humans, and will help to usher-in a utopia.[88] Raël teaches that the Elohim's arrival will herald a new and improved political system on Earth.[82] This will be a single world government that Raël terms a "geniocracy",[99] or "rule of geniuses",[100] and which he discusses in his fifth book, Geniocracy.[69] According to this system, only those few people who are at least fifty percent more intelligent than the average person will be permitted to rule.[101] Raël's proposed geniocratic system bears similarities with the style of governance that Plato promoted in his work Republic.[102] Raëlians thus reject democracy, believing that it fails to ensure that society has the best leadership.[101] Raël claims that this future society will have no war, and that crime will have been ended via genetic engineering.[101] In this future, Raël states, humans will be able to travel beyond Earth, to colonise other planets.[103] Raël claims that robots will assume menial tasks, allowing humans to devote their time to pleasurable pursuits.[104] He also argued that there would be biological robots which would serve as sex-slaves, akin to those which Raël states that he encountered on his visit to the Elohim planet.[105] A single world currency will be introduced, as a prelude to the total abolition of money, while a unified world calendar will also be adopted.[101]

Cloning and survival after death

Raëlians reject the existence of the ethereal soul that survives physical death,[106] and instead argue that the only hope for immortality is through scientific means.[103] The Raëlians claim that the Elohim will clone and thus recreate dead individuals, but only those particular individuals who they deem merit this recreation.[107] In this, they believe in a "conditional immortality", with immortality for a minority and oblivion for the majority.[107] The resurrection of Jesus, as recounted in the Gospels, is for instance explained as an example of Elohim cloning.[107]

Raëlists advocate for the development of human cloning technology on Earth.[105] Raëlians also believe that deceased individuals can be cloned so that they could be tried and punished for their crimes.[107] After the September 11th, 2001 terrorist attacks in the United States, in which the attackers killed themselves, the Raëlists proposed that they could be resurrected through cloning to be tried for their actions.[108][109] Due to its emphasis upon attaining immortality, Raëlism deplores suicide; after the Heaven's Gate group engaged in a mass suicide in 1997, the Raëlian Church was among the new religions that issued press releases condemning suicide.[110]

As opposed to the scientific definition of reproductive cloning, which is simply the creation of a genetically identical living organism, Raëlians seek to both genetically clone individuals, rapidly accelerate growth of the clone to adulthood through a process like guided self-assembly of rapidly expanded cells or even nanotechnology.[111] Raël told lawmakers that banning the development of human cloning was comparable to outlawing medical advances such as "antibiotics, blood transfusions, and vaccines".[112]

Morality, ethics, and gender roles

Raëlism insists on a strict ethical code for its followers.[113] Members are expected to take responsibility for their own actions, respect cultural and racial difference, promote non-violence, strive for world peace, and share wealth and resources.[113] They are also encouraged to uphold democracy, in the belief that humanity will ultimately make a democratic choice to introduce geniocracy.[113] The Raëlian opinion is that everything should be permitted so long as it harms no one and does not impede scientific and technological advance.[101] Members are nevertheless advised against using recreational drugs or stimulants so as not to harm their health,[114] although some practitioners have acknowledged that they use alcohol and cigarettes.[115]

John M. Bozeman characterized the religion's morality as "progressive",[116] while Palmer referred to the group's "liberal social values",[117] and Chryssides called Raëlist values "worldly and hedonistic".[118] The scholar of religion Paul Oliver said that the philosophy's ethics are "relativistic" in that practitioners are encouraged to act in a manner that they feel appropriate to the context.[32] Several scholars have also argued that it is a "world-affirming" religion, using the typology established by Roy Wallis.[119]

Raël considered gender as an artificial construct and emphasized its fluidity.[120] Raël avoided a macho persona and is instead often described by his followers as being "gentle" and "feminine".[121] Palmer suggested that Raël regarded women as being superior to men because they were described as being more like the Elohim.[61] In Raël's account, the inhabitants of the Elohim planet "have 10 percent of masculinity and 90 percent of femininity".[61] Raël also proposed that if women were in positions of political power across the world, there would be no war.[61] The Raëlians have participated with public protests for women's rights.[122] At its June 2003 "Joy of Being Woman" demonstration, Raëlian women danced naked through the streets of Paris.[122] Palmer described the Raëlians as feminists,[123] although Raël criticized mainstream feminism, arguing that it "copied the shortcomings of men".[124] Generally adopting the belief that the human body is malleable,[125] Raëlism has a positive opinion of plastic surgery to improve physical appearance.[126]

Raëlism teaches that the Elohim created humanity to feel sexual desire as a panacea for their violent impulses.[127] It states that through the pursuit of sexual pleasure, new pathways between the neurons in the brain are forged, thus enhancing an individual's intelligence.[128] Raëlism encourages its members to explore their sexuality;[60] while Raël is often photographed with beautiful women and appears to be heterosexual, he encourages homosexual experimentation.[129] Adopting an accepting attitude towards different forms of sexual orientation and expression,[69] Raëlism teaches that differences in sexual orientation are rooted in the Elohim's primordial genetic programming and are something to be celebrated.[130] Researching about the Raëlians of Quebec, Palmer found that many of them avoided categorizing themselves by using terms like "heterosexual", "homosexual", or "bisexual", finding those labels to be too limiting.[131]

The Raëlians have stressed the need for respect and mutual consent in sexual behaviour.[132] The group places a strong taboo on incest, rape, and sexual activities involving children.[132] Anyone involved in the Movement who is found to have been involved in these latter activities is excommunicated,[133] while Raël has recommended that paedophiles be castrated or placed in mental institutions.[133] Those believed to have forced unwelcome sexual attention upon another person are excommunicated from the Movement for seven years– the amount of time Raëlians believe it takes for all of a person's biological cells to be regenerated.[132]

The Raëlists reject both enforced monogamy and marriage, regarding these as institutions that have been enforced to enslave women and suppress sexual expression.[134] The religion discourages its members from marrying.[60] Members are also discouraged from contributing to global overpopulation;[60] members are urged not to have more than two children, and ideally none at all.[135] Raël states that should two individuals wish to procreate, their psychic control during the act of conception can affect any child resulting.[136] The Raëlists also believe that once human cloning has been developed, biological reproduction will be obsolete.[127] As well as endorsing the use of birth control and contraceptives,[137] Raëlists endorse the use of abortion to terminate unwanted pregnancies.[138] Raël has also argued that if a woman does not want a child who has been born then she should give it up to be raised by society.[133]

Some Swiss government authorities responded to Raëlians' opinions about Sensual Meditation with a fear that Raëlians are a threat to public morals for supporting liberalized sex education for children. They argue that such liberalized sex education that teaches children how to obtain sexual gratification would encourage sexual abuse of underage children.[139]

The two variants of the Raëlian logo; the former uses the swastika in the centre and the latter a swirl representing the shape of a galaxy. The latter was adopted to avoid the connotations of Nazism that the swastika has in Western countries and was used between 1991 and 2007.
The symbol initially used to signify Raëlism was a six-pointed star with a swastika in the centre.[140] Raël stated that this was the symbol he originally saw on the hull of the Elohim's spaceship.[141] Raëlians regard this as a symbol of infinity.[142] Practitioners also believe that this symbol helps facilitate their own telepathic contact with the Elohim.[143] Raëlists typically wear a medallion of the symbol around their neck.[44]

The Raëlian use of the swastika, a symbol that had been prominently used by Germany's Nazi Party during the 1930s and 1940s, resulted in accusations from the Montreal anti-cult organization Info-Cult that the Raëlians promoted fascism and racism.[112] Outside Info-Cult's office, Raëlians spoke against the act of discriminating against a religious minority.[112] On 2 January 1992, a dozen people protested against the use of the swastika in the Raëlian logo in Miami's Eden Roc Hotel. The use of the swastika and other Raëlian practices has resulted in criticism from the group Hineni of Florida, an Orthodox Jewish organization.[144]

In 1992, the Raëlian Movement altered their symbol, replacing the central swastika with a swirling shape. They explained that this was due to a request from the Elohim to change the symbol in order to help in negotiations with Israel for the building of the Extraterrestrial Embassy, although the country continued to deny their request.[145][146] Raël also stated that the change was made to show respect to the victims of the Holocaust.[100] The newly added swirling shape was explained as a depiction of a swirling galaxy.[100] In 2005, the Israeli Raëlian Guide Kobi Drori stated that the Lebanese government was discussing proposals by the Raëlian movement to build their interplanetary embassy in Lebanon. However, one condition was that the Raëlians not display their logo on top of the building because it mixes a swastika and a Star of David. According to Drori, the Raëlians involved refused this offer, as they wished to keep the symbol as it was.[147] From 1991 to 2007, the official Raëlian symbol in Europe and America did not have the original swastika, but Raël decided to make the original symbol, the Star of David intertwined with a swastika, the only official symbol of the Raëlian Movement worldwide.[148]

Practices

Raëlism involves a series of monthly meetings, initiations, and meditation rituals.[58] Where possible, Raëlians congregate with fellow practitioners on the third Sunday of the month.[149] It is the group's policy that these events occur in rented rooms rather than property that the Raëlian Movement itself has purchased.[8] At the monthly meetings in Montreal, Raël himself often appeared.[150]

The main ritual in Raëlism is the "transmission of the cellular plan", in which a Raëlian Guide placed their hands upon another individual's head, through which the Guide is believed to receive the individual's cellular code and then telepathically transmit it to the Elohim.[151] Doing so denotes the initiate's formal recognition of the Elohim as the creators of humanity.[152] This is used as part of the "baptism", or initiation ceremony for new members joining the Movement.[153] Those in the Movement who hold the rank of bishop and priest are permitted to conduct these initiation ceremonies.[154] In some instances, when the necessary individuals are present, Raël touches the head of a

Raëlian bishop, who in turn touches that of a Raëlian priest, who touches the head of the initiate to ensure the "transmission".[152] These "transmissions" are permitted to take place on one of four days in the year that play a prominent role in the Raëlian calendar.[155] The first examples took place in April 1976, when Raël carried out the "transmission" ceremonies of forty initiates on the Roc Plat.[154]

The Raëlian calendar begins with the nuclear bombing of Hiroshima on August 6, 1945.[156] Each year after this date is referred to as "AH" or "après Hiroshima" ("after Hiroshima").[157] The Raëlians celebrate four religious festivals each year, two of which mark Raël's claimed encounters with the Elohim.[153] These are the first Sunday in April, which is the date on which Raëlians believe the Elohim created the first humans; August 6th, which marks the day of the nuclear bombing of Hiroshima in 1945; October 7th, which is the day in which Raël claims that he encountered the Elohim for the second time, in 1974; and December 13th, which is the day that Raël allegedly first encountered the Elohim in 1973.[113]

Sensual meditation

A major practice in Raëlism is "sensual meditation", something that Raël outlined in his 1980 book La méditation sensuelle.[100] Raëlians are encouraged to take part in this guided meditation or visualisation on a daily basis, with the intent of transmitting love and telepathic links to the Elohim and achieving harmony with infinity.[158] In this, practitioners are often assisted in this meditation through listening to an instruction tape.[159] Sensual meditation sessions also take place communally at the group's monthly meetings, during which the assembled adherents sit or lie on the floor in a dimly lit room. They are then guided through it by a Raëlian Guide speaking through a microphone;[160] the meditation may be accompanied by New Age music.[161]

Sensual meditation begins with a relaxation exercise known as harmonisation avec l'infini ("harmonization with the infinite").[160] One stage of this process is "oxygenation", which entails deep breathing.[162] Practitioners are taught to relax and then envision themselves expanding their frame of reference until the self becomes only a tiny speck within the universe.[163] They are then tasked with visualising the bones and organs of the body, and ultimately the atoms within the body itself.[164] The guided meditation then encourages the meditators to imagine themselves being on the Elohim's planet and communicating telepathically with these aliens.[165]

Palmer found that Raëlians varyingly described a sense of physical well-being, psychic abilities, or sexual arousal during these meditations and interpreted these as evidence that they were in telepathic contact with the Elohim.[166] The goal of sensual meditation is to achieve a "cosmic orgasm",[167] which is characterised as the ultimate experience a person can have.[168] Palmer quoted one senior Raëlian as describing the "cosmic orgasm" as "the sensual experience of the unity between the self and the universe".[160]

Seminars

A Raëlian protest sign is raised at a political rally which demands the return of U.S. troops from foreign military engagements.

The Raëlian Church holds week-long summer seminars called "Stages of Awakening".[149][169] These involve daily lectures by Raël, sensual meditation sessions, periods of fasting and feasting, testimonials, and various alternative therapies.[8] Activities that have attracted press attention have included dressing in the clothes of the opposite gender as part of an exercise to play with the fluidity of gender expression,[161][170] and observing one's own genitals and masturbating.[171]

Raëlians use these seminars as an opportunity to form friendships or sexual relationships.[172] Attendees wear white togas with name tags.[8] In 1991, a French journalist attended a seminar, and taped couples having sexual intercourse in tents, something which was then much-publicized.[112] Following these seminars, a second seminar, this time restricted to members of the Structure, takes place.[172]

Origins

Claude Vorilhon was born in Ambert, France, on 30 September 1946.[173] He was the illegitimate son of a 15-year-old mother; his father had been a Sephardi Jew who was then in hiding from the Nazi authorities.[173] Vorilhon later recounted being raised as an atheist by his grandmother and aunt, although for a time he attended a Roman Catholic boarding school.[173] As a teenager, Vorilhon hitch-hiked to Paris, where he pursued a career as a singer, releasing singles under the name "Claude Celler".[174] He then married a nurse, and had two children with her.[175] In 1973, he founded the racing car magazine Auto Pop, and also worked as a test-driver for such vehicles.[175] In November of 1973, a new law was introduced in France which banned speeding on the highway, ending his work as a test driver.[175] Auto Pop ceased publication in September 1974.[176]

The Puy Lassolas, the mountain where Raël claimed he first encountered the Elohim in 1973

There had been a range of reported UFO sightings in the 1970s in France,[177] and the ancient astronaut theory was "very much in vogue" in the country by the middle of that decade.[178] In early 1974, Vorilhon announced that in December of 1973, he had been contacted by the Elohim while walking along the Puy Lassolas mountain. He began promoting these ideas in interviews on French television and radio.[179] He began lecturing on his alleged experiences in Paris, where he attracted a group of followers,[180] many of which were science-fiction fans or amateur ufologists.[178] In December of 1974, an organisation based upon his ideas, called the Mouvement pour l'accueil des Elohims créateurs de l'humanité (MADECH; "Movement for the Welcoming of the Elohim, Creators of Humanity"), was launched.[180] Vorilhon began referring to himself as "Raël".[180] A newsletter, called Apocalypse, began publication in October of 1974.

[180] MADECH began raising money for the self-publication of Vorilhon's first book,[180] which appeared as Le livre qui dit la verité that year.[45] Raëlians treat his first book with reverence, often referring to it simply as Le livre ("the book").[181]

Some members of MADECH wanted the organisation to take a broader interest in Ufology beyond Raël's own claims, and also desired to restrict his authority within the group.[180] Amid an internal power struggle, Raël called an emergency meeting in April 1975. The feud continued, and in July of that year, he dismissed MADECH's executives, and replaced them with seven of his own supporters.[182] Raël also announced that he had been contacted by the Elohim for a second time, and that on this occasion, they had taken him to visit their planet. He outlined these claims in his 1975 book Les Extra-Terrestres M'ont Emmené sur Leur Planète.[183] Opposition to Raël remained evident in MADECH, and in 1976, he disbanded the group, beginning the Raëlian Movement as a replacement in February 1976.[184] It operated along a strict hierarchy, with Raël as its director, referred to as the "Guide of Guides".[185] Unlike MADECH, it promoted a broader religious structure, including ritual practices.[186] It continued publication of Apocalypse to spread its message.[185]

In 1976, the Raëlians sent a mission to the Canadian province of Quebec, to attract converts in the Francophone region.[187] The next year, a Quebecois branch of the Movement was established.[188] Raël's first two books were then published in a single English edition, titled Space Aliens Took Me to Their Planet in 1978, and republished as The Message Given To Me By Extra-Terrestrials: They Took Me to their Planet in 1986, and in a new translation, as The Final Message in 1998.[45] He expanded upon his ideas with several additional books: Accueiller Les Extra-Terrestes in 1979 (translated as Let's Welcome Our Fathers from Space in 1986),[45] La Méditation Sensuelle in 1980 (translated as Sensual Meditation in 1986), and Geniocracy.[45]

Later development

In 1980, the Raëlians sent a mission to Japan, followed by a mission to Africa in 1982, and then a mission to Australia in 1990.[97] In the early 1980s, the Raëlian Movement bought a campground near Albi in southern France, which they named Eden.[172] In 1984, Raël underwent a year's retreat in which he avoided public appearance.[189] The following year, his first wife left both him and the movement;[133] he subsequently began a relationship with a Japanese Raëlian, Lisa Sunagawa, for several years.[190] During the mid-1990s, Raël returned to his hobby of motor racing, competing in rounds two and three of the 1995 Magna Enduro Racing Championship and the 1998 Motorola Cup in Miami before retiring from the sport in 2001.[191] In 1992, a schism appeared in the religion as a group of about forty practitioners were expelled. They formed a rival, smaller group, the Apostles of the Last Days, espousing the belief that Raël had been the original spokesman of the Elohim but had been taken over by Satan.[192]

In 1992, the Raëlian Movement bought 115 hectares near Valcourt in Quebec, naming this property Le Jardin du Prophète ("the Garden of the Prophet").[172] It was here in 1997 that the organisation opened UFOLand, a museum about ufology. Its purpose was to raise money for the Elohim Embassy, but in 2001 it closed to the public, having proved financially unviable.[193] It was also during 1997, a month after Ian Wilmut announced the birth of Dolly the Sheep, a successful clone, that Raël established the company Valiant Venture to explore the commercial applications of cloning.[194] Through it came Clonaid, of which the Raëlian Bishop Brigitte Boisselier was co-founder, director, and spokesperson.[9] The initiation of this group and its promotion of human cloning incited much debate among other religious figures, scientists, and ethicists.[9] Raël and Boisselier both spoke before US President Bill Clinton's Congress hearing on human cloning in March 2001.[195]

At the July 1998 training camp in the Jardins des Prophètes, Raël announced that in December 1997 he had received another revelation from the Elohim, commanding him to form a new grouping within the Raëlian Movement, the Order of Raël's Angels.[196] This was to be a secret society,[130] open only to women who would become the consorts of the Elohim after their arrival on Earth.[196] A newsletter, Plumes d'Anges (Angel Feathers), was issued containing information about the Order.[156] Palmer noted that by emphasizing the unique qualities of women, this group challenged the established Raëlian doctrine that men and women are wholly equal and interchangeable.[130]

In 2001, Raël toured Asia, giving seminars.[197] That year he married for a second time, to a 16-year-old ballet student. Raëlism discourages marriage, and this instance was done for expediency, because he had been questioned by customs officials when traveling with her across borders. They subsequently divorced but remained a couple.[198] In November 2002, a local man vandalised the group's Jardins des Prophètes property, causing significant damage.[199] Raël stated that this had been a preliminary test of "The Abraham Project", which is a joint operation between the Central Intelligence Agency and the French intelligence agencies to assassinate him via using schizophrenic people who are directed via mind-control.[200]

In December 2002, Boisselier announced that Clonaid's work had resulted in the birth of a baby, named Eve, which she claimed was the world's first human clone.[201] The child was not presented for scrutiny by scientists;[202] the IRM's allegations regarding Baby Eve were never substantiated by the scientific community.[93] Many commentators believed the announcement had been a hoax.[203] In January 2003 the Raëlians declared that Eve's parents had hidden themselves to evade attention.[204] Baby Eve's appearance gained the Raëlians much international press coverage,[93] and also much ridicule.[205] The group claimed this publicity generated around 5000 new members.[206] Boisellier announced periodically that further clone infants had been born, in the Netherlands, Japan, South Korea, and Australia, although the press increasingly deemed these hoaxes and stopped attending Raëlian press conferences.[202]

In January 2003, Raël announced Boisellier as his appointed successor,[202] and also published The Maitreya, in which he identified himself with the eponymous figure from Buddhist prophecy.[59] In response to Raël's association with Clonaid, South Korean immigration authorities denied him entry to their country in 2003.[207] The group then protested near South Korea's Ministry of Health and Welfare that ordered him to leave.[207] Raël appeared alongside a group of women, "Raël's Girls", in the October 2004 issue of Playboy.[6][208] In 2005, two amateur documentary makers, Abdullah Hashem and Joseph McGowen, attended and filmed a Raëlian seminar in Las Vegas, claiming that they were making a student film. They then used the footage as the basis of a documentary, which they presented as an exposé of the group.[209] In 2009, the Church announced plans for a new UFOLand in Las Vegas.[6]

Organization and structure

The Raëlian Movement is a strictly hierarchical organization,[185] in which there are two levels of membership.[210] The majority of members are referred to simply as "Raëlians",[8] whereas the members who are in the higher levels, which control the Movement, are referred to as "the structure".[211]

Member hierarchy

The Structure is divided along a six-tiered system.[212] Raël is at the top of the Raëlian Church, being referred to as the "Guide of Guides".[185] Senior members of the Structure re-elect him to that position each seven years.[154] Below Raël are the "Bishop Guides", then the "Priest Guides", then the "Animators", then the "Assistant Animators", and finally the "Probationers".[8] Those who are characterized as "Guides" are expected to be exemplars for the rest of the movement, for instance by strictly adhering to the avoidance of alcohol, caffeine, and recreational drugs.[110] Race, gender, and sexual orientation are no barrier to rising through the ranks of the group's leadership structure.[130] However, Palmer noted that by the mid-1990s, there were few women in leadership positions within the organisation.[213]

Members of the Raëlian structure begin as level 0 "trainees" during annual seminars. The Raelian structure was said in 2007 to have about 2,300 members,[214] 170 "Raëlian guides",[215] and 41 bishops.[216]

Three Raëlian Bishops sit on a "Council of the Wise", which monitors heresy and arranges punishment for transgressors.[217] When they seek to punish an individual, it is usually for a seven-year "excommunication". It lasts seven years because Raëlians believe that it takes this long for every cell in the human body to be replaced.[8] In more severe cases, the council can oversee a "demarking", by which they cancel the transmission of the cellular code, believing that this revokes the individual's hope for immortality through cloning.[8]

Members pay an annual membership fee to the Raëlian Movement.[154] Full members of the Movement are encouraged to tithe 10% of their income to the organisation.[218] This tithe is then divided up, with 3% going to the national branch and 7% to the International Movement's central administration.[219] An additional, 1% may go to Raël himself.[97] Tithing is however not enforced.[220] In her research, Palmer found many practitioners who admitted to not paying the tithe.[115] A 1991 survey of Raëlians found that a third of respondents did not pay,[221] while in an interview, Raël suggested that over 60 percent do not.[97] It is these tithes and membership fees, coupled with the sales of Raël's books, that represent the International Raëlian Movement's main income.[132] This money is then saved toward the construction of the Elohim Embassy or spent on the production of flyers, books, videos, and other material that is used to disseminate the Raëlian message.[97]

The group initially owned a country estate in Albi, France, before later obtaining one in Valcourt, Quebec.[8]

Order of Angels

In 1998, Raël established an internal all-female group, the Order of Raël's Angels, whose members are trained to become the consorts of the Elohim.[127] He stated that these women would be the only humans permitted contact with the Elohim after the latter arrive on Earth.[222] He further claimed that they will serve as the Elohim's liaisons with human politicians, scientists, and journalists.[222] Raël stated that it was only women who could be Angels because men were not feminine enough for the extremely gentle, delicate, and sensitive Elohim.[222] Trans women were permitted entry; Raël praised one transgender member for "choosing to be a woman".[126]

The Angels are meant to cultivate their feminine and nurturing side.[223] They are tasked with pursuing self-transformation, striving to please the Elohim and to resemble them more closely by cultivating discipline, serenity, harmony, purity, humility, charisma, and both internal and external beauty.[224] The Angels are instructed to regularly pray to the Elohim and regularly meditate.[197] They are encouraged to limit their meat consumption and to avoid carbohydrates and sugar so as to maintain their physical beauty.[126] They have proved useful for the group's public relations and have also provided volunteers for its human cloning experiments.[225][226] The Order has also engaged in the selling of human ova on the internet, launching a website to do so in 1999.[227] Raël stated that this would help the Angels achieve financial independence.[122]

The Order of Raël's Angels has a six-tiered structure, symmetrical with the six-tiered structure of the Raëlian Movement as a whole.[228] Raël divides the Angels into three groups: the White, Pink, and Golden Ribbon Angels.[228] White Angels wear white feathers on a necklace, can choose human lovers, and are tasked with operating in the world to attract more women into the Raëlian movement.[229] Pink Angels wear a pink feather on a necklace and are considered by Raël to be the "Chosen Ones" who will become the consorts of the Elohim. They are expected to live a sequestered life, initially in the Jardins des Prophètes community, and are expected to reserve their sexual activity for the extraterrestrials.[230] The Gold Ribbon Angels are characterised by a gold cord worn around the neck. They are handpicked by Raël for their physical beauty, and are described as being the first humans who will approach the Elohim on the latter's arrival on Earth.[230] The Pink and Gold Ribbon Angels are expected to abstain from sexual activity with most other humans but should receive instruction in alien lovemaking from Raël himself as well as engaging in sexual acts alone or with other Angels.[231]

The Order was insulated from the rest of the religion, with the Angels' living quarters for instance being off-limits to non-Angels.[232] Access to the Angels is strictly limited for both journalists and scholars.[233] Gold Ribbon Angels have been demoted from this status as they have aged, on the explanation that as their physical beauty has deteriorated they are no longer suited to greeting the Elohim. These demoted individuals are then tasked with training younger replacements.[234] Other individuals have been deprived of their status as Angels altogether, when they are perceived to have acted in contravention of the group's ethos.[235]

The initiation rites include declaring an oath or making a contract in which one agrees to become defender of the Raëlian ideology and its founder Raël.[170][236] A few days later, Time magazine wrote that French chemist Brigitte Boisselier was an Order of Angels member.[237] Around this time, cult specialist Mike Kropveld termed the Order of Angels "one of the most transparent movements" he had witnessed, though he was alarmed by the women's promise to defend Raël's life with their own bodies.[236]

Raël has instructed some women members to play a pro-sex feminist role in the Raëlian Church. "Rael's Girls" is another group of women in the religion which are against the suppression of feminine acts of pleasure, including sexual intercourse with men or women. Rael's Girls consists solely of women who work in the sex industry.[238] The women of Rael's Girls say there is not any reason to repent for performing striptease or being a prostitute.[238][239] This organization was established "to support the choice of the women who are working in the sex industry".[240]

Outreach and advocacy

The International Raëlian Movement has established various projects through which to promote its ideology.[241] In 1997 it created Clonaid, a company devoted to human cloning.[241] Clients can bank a sample of their DNA with the group, which offers to then produce a single clone of the individual after they die.[241] Another Raëlian company, Ovulaid, seeks to provide ovaries for individuals and couples who cannot biologically produce their offspring.[241] It expresses its intention to develop technologies that can create "designer babies" to the desired specification of their client.

[241] An additional project, Insuraclone, is designed to clone organs for an individual in the event of future organ failure,[242] while Clonapet intended to clone people's pets after the latter died.[241]

The Raëlians are known for their socio-political activism, specifically for women's rights, gay rights, opposition to racism, banning nuclear testing, and promoting genetically-modified foods.[133] Throughout the history of Raëlism, members of the Raëlian Church have toured public settings advocating masturbation, condoms, and birth control.[226] Through its activities, Palmer stated that the Raëlian Movement was involved in "concocting, then carefully monitoring, a mild level of cultural conflict" to generate publicity for the group,[243] something coupled with "blatant courtship of the media".[244] She compared these tactics to those of Anton LaVey's Church of Satan in the 1960s and 1970s.[243] When media has adopted a mocking tone toward the religion, Raël has urged its followers to defend their beliefs, resulting in letter-writing campaigns and sometimes lawsuits.[244]

In 1992, the IRM launched protests against the Montreal Catholic School Commission's decision to veto the addition of condom machines to the bathrooms of Roman Catholic high schools in Quebec. The Raëlians parked a "condom-mobile" outside Roman Catholic high schools in Quebec and Ontario from which they dispensed contraceptives to the pupils.[245] In 1993, the Raëlians organized a conference on masturbation in Quebec, at which speeches were given by Raël and Betty Dodson. Advertising this cause, Raëlians handed out badges with "Oui à la masturbation (Yes to masturbation)" on them at the Montreal Jazz Festival.[246]

Raëlians promoting "Go Topless Day" in Paris in 2018

In 2000, the Raëlians launched NOPEDO, a group to combat paedophilia.[133] In 2001, they publicly distributed leaflets in Italy and Switzerland protesting the existence of over a hundred child molesters among Roman Catholic clergy in France. Geneva's Episcopal vicar sued the Raëlian Church for libel but the judge dismissed the charges as the Raëlian accusation was deemed to only target convicted priests and not the Roman Catholic Church as a whole.[247] In 2002, Raëlians held an anti-clerical parade in Montreal, where they gave high school students Christian crosses and invited the students to both burn them and sign letters of apostasy to the Roman Catholic Church. The Quebec Association of Bishops called this "incitement to hatred", and several school boards attempted to prevent their students from meeting Raëlians.[248]

The movement supports genetically-modified foods.[107] In 2003, naked members arranged themselves into the shape of the phrases "J'aime OGM" and "I love GM" in a Quebec field.[249] In 2006, about 30 Raëlians, some of them topless, took part in an anti-war demonstration in Seoul, South Korea.[250] In 2003, Raëlians in white alien costumes bore signs bearing the message "NO WAR ... ET wants Peace, too!" to protest the 2003 Invasion of Iraq.[251] In 2009 it launched its "Adopt a Clitoris" project to raise money to create a hospital in Africa to reverse damage caused by female genital mutilation (FGM);[252] it has also established Clitoraid, an organization whose mission is to oppose FGM.[253][254] Another of the groups established by the Raëlian Church is ARAMIS (Active Raelian Association for Multiplicity In Sexuality),[1] which is the Raëlian Association of Sexual Minorities and an LGBT rights group.[133]

Several Raëlian groups in the United States have organized annual protests, claiming that women should have the same legal right to go topless in public that men enjoy without fear of arrest for indecent exposure.[255] Some people have called this a publicity stunt designed to recruit members.[256] Go Topless Day is their annual event, with women protesting topless except for nipple pasties to avoid arrest. It is held near 26 August, the anniversary of Women's Equality Day.[257]

Demographics

Main article: Demographics of Raëlism

Established in France, Raëlism initially spread in Francophone areas of Europe, Africa, and North America.[76] As of the mid-1990s, membership clustered predominantly in France, Quebec, and Japan.[103] Palmer noted that in Canada, Raëlism had faced difficulty spreading from Quebec and into the country's Anglophone provinces.[161] In 1999, Bozeman said that the Movement had around 35,000 members,[42] while in 2003 Chryssides said it had about 55,000 members worldwide.[19] By the early 2010s, the group was claiming 60,000 members internationally, a number Palmer and Sentes thought was "probably inflated".[258] In Britain, the sociologist Eileen Barker said that there were "only a dozen or so" committed members of the religion in 1989.[259] By 2001, the sociologist David V. Barrett suggested that there were around 40 to 50 committed members in the country and around 500 sympathisers;[76] two years later, Chryssides thought there were about 40 members and 200 sympathisers in Britain.[19]

An internal survey of the group's members in 1988 found that there were almost double as many men as women in the Movement.[260] Similarly, based on her attendance at Raëlian events in Quebec, Palmer noted that men usually outnumbered women.[161] She observed that many of the men acted in an effeminate fashion,[161] and were often attracted to other men.[131] Palmer also observed several transgender people at the meetings,[261] and found that a significant number of the women present worked as strippers.[131] On these grounds, she suggested that Raëlism had a particular appeal for "people who define themselves as sexually marginal".[261] Palmer also suggested that Raëlism had an appeal for "committed atheists who are hopelessly secularized yet suffering from the existential angst of living in a world devoid of order and higher values".[262]

Conversion

Raëlians engage in missionary activities to attract converts.[97] Members buy Raël's books to sell on the street, hoping to recoup their original costs.[132] They often encounter much resistance to their attempts to convert others; Raël explains that this is to be expected, for the Elohim told him that only 4% of humanity is intelligent enough to be receptive to the Raëlian message.[97] Any Raëlian found trying to force someone to convert is banned from the organisation for seven years, the period which Raëlians believe it takes for every cell in the body to be replaced.[103]

Since 1979, new members of the Raëlian Movement have been expected to sign an "Act of Apostasy",[263] and send a letter of apostasy to any religious organisation that they were previously involved with.[264] They also sign a contract which permits a mortician to cut a piece of bone from their forehead after death, which they understand as the "Third Eye". This specimen will be stored in ice at a Swiss facility until the Elohim return, at which time it may be used to clone the deceased individual.[265] This process is known as "the lifting of the frontal bone".[160] In addition, people who join are expected to bequeath their assets to the local Raëlian group,[59] although this is not obligatory.[160]

Some former Christian clergy-members have joined the Raëlians, sometimes being swiftly promoted to the level of Priest or Bishop due to the skills that are brought with them from their previous religious organisation.[266] In 2004, for example, Ron Boston, a former bishop of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, joined the Raëlian Movement, stating that doing so would allow him to embrace his homosexuality.[267]

Reception

According to sociologist Susan J. Palmer, in society, Raëlism is "universally mocked",[268] and even at conferences of scholars of religion, where individuals are accustomed to studying a diverse range of belief systems, attendees have treated Raëlian beliefs with "incredulity or even mirth".[19] Non-members often regard Raël's claims as a deliberate forgery to fool his followers.[269] An especially critical reception has come from ex-Raëlians and the anti-cult movement.[88] Jean-Denis Saint-Cyr, a high-ranking member of the Raëlian movement, for example, accused Raël of plagiarizing the earlier writings of Sendy in creating his religion.[88] Another prominent apostate, namely the Quebecois Erick Lamarche, who calls himself "Exraël", quit while claiming that too much money was being donated to Raël and the senior members so that they could have luxurious lifestyles.[270] Critics repeatedly drew comparisons between Raëlism and national-socialism, because of the former's promotion of a governance system wherein people are graded by their intelligence,[271] its emphasis upon genetic engineering,[271] and its use of the swastika.[272]

Raëlism has undergone academic research from scholars of religion, especially from Palmer, who first encountered the religion in Montreal in 1987.[273] She initially thought that she "had never encountered an NRM that was so cooperative, that actually liked being studied".[274] Between 2002 and 2003, Palmer was blacklisted by the group; they banned her from their meetings and told her that she had lost the opportunity to meet the Elohim when they arrive.[275] Palmer then drew upon both her interviews with active members and Raël's publications for her 2004 book on Raëlism: Aliens Adored.[276]

Palmer stated that journalists that she had encountered were often "fishing" for "bad things" to say about the Raëlians.[277] Many journalists sought to portray Raël as a danger to his followers, akin to David Koresh or Jim Jones, although Palmer thought this to be "ludicrous", stating that Raël was "not prone to violence".[36] Journalists also sought to present him as someone who sexually exploited his female members, which again Palmer found no evidence for.[278] Following statements that the Order of Raël's Angels would do anything for Raël, there was also press speculation that the group would engage in mass-suicide akin to that of the Order of the Solar Temple.[279] Palmer argued that the Raëlians lacked the paranoid mentality and demonization of the outside world that had been common to new religious movements that had killed people.[280]

The Five Ks - BBC Teach
Kesh, Kara, Kanga, Kachera, and Kirpan are the Five Ks (Panj Kakar), five mandatory articles of faith for initiated Sikhs (Khalsa), symbolizing spiritual discipline and commitment, representing uncut hair, a steel bracelet, a wooden comb, cotton undergarments, and a ceremonial dagger, respectively, commanded by Guru Gobind Singh to be worn at all times as outward signs of their faith and unity.
Here's what each signifies:
Kesh (Uncut Hair): Represents spiritual devotion, a commitment to God's will, and rejecting vanity; typically covered by a turban for men and some women.
Kara (Steel Bracelet): A circle symbolizing unity with God, eternity, and reminding the wearer to do good deeds.
Kanga (Wooden Comb): Symbolizes cleanliness, orderliness, and spiritual discipline, used to keep hair tidy.
Kachera (Cotton Undergarments): Represents self-control, modesty, and readiness for action, historically worn as practical shorts.
Kirpan (Ceremonial Dagger): A sword symbolizing a Sikh's duty to defend the weak, uphold justice, and protect the oppressed.
These articles were instituted in 1699, serving as constant reminders of Sikh principles and identity.

Kanga, Kara and Kirpan – three of the five Ks
In Sikhism, the Five Ks (Punjabi: ਪੰਜ ਕਕਾਰ, Pañj Kakār, Punjabi pronunciation: [ˈpənd͡ʒ.ˈkə ˌkaːɾ]) are five items that Guru Gobind Singh, in 1699, commanded Khalsa Sikhs to wear at all times. They are: kesh (ਕੇਸ਼, keś, unshorn hair and beard since the Sikh decided to keep it), kangha (ਕੰਘਾ, kãṅghā, a comb for the kesh, usually wood), kara (ਕੜਾ, kaṛā, a bracelet, usually made of iron or steel), kachhera (ਕਛੈਰਾ, kachairā, an undergarment), and kirpan (ਕਿਰਪਾਨ, kirpān, a small curved sword or knife made of iron or steel).[1]

The Five Ks are not just symbols, but articles of faith that collectively form the external identity and the Khalsa devotee's commitment to the Sikh rehni, 'Sikh way of life'.[2] A Sikh who has taken Amrit and keeps all five Ks is known as Khalsa ('pure') or Amritdhari Sikh ('Amrit Sanskar participant'), a Sikh who has not taken Amrit but follows the teachings of the Sri Guru Granth Sahib is called a Sahajdhari Sikh.

Kesh

Main article: Kesh

A Sikh man having Kesh(hairs) of long beard and head hairs ,wearing a turban
The kesh, also known as kesa, or uncut, long hair, is considered by Sikhs to be an indispensable part of the human body. It also emulates the appearance of Guru Gobind Singh and is one of the primary signs by which a Sikh can be clearly and quickly identified. A Sikh never cuts or trims any hair as a symbol of respect for the perfection of God's creation. The uncut long hair and the beard, in the case of men, form the main kakār for Sikhs.[3]

The turban is a spiritual crown, which is a constant reminder to the Sikh that they are sitting on the throne of consciousness and are committed to living according to Sikh principles. Guru Gobind Singh told his Sikhs:

"Khalsa mero roop hai khaas. Khalsa mai ho karo nivaas... The Khalsa is my image. Within the Khalsa I reside."[4] Wearing a turban declares sovereignty, dedication, self-respect, courage and piety.

A noted figure in Sikh history is Bhai Taru Singh, who was martyred when he refused to get his kesh cut.

Kangha

Main article: Kangha

Kangha – one of the five articles of faith for the Sikhs
Comb the hair twice a day, covering it with turban that is to be tied from fresh.

—Tankhanama Bhai Nand Lal Singh[5]
A kanga is a medium-sized wooden comb that Sikhs use twice a day. It is supposed to be worn only in the hair and at all times. Combs help to clean and remove tangles from the hair and are a symbol of cleanliness. Combing their hair reminds Sikhs that their lives should be tidy and organized.

The comb keeps the hair tidy, a symbol of not just accepting what God has given, but also an injunction to maintain it with grace. The Guru Granth Sahib said hair should be allowed to grow naturally; this precludes any shaving for both men and women. In the Guru's time, some holy men let their hair become tangled and dirty. The Guru said that this was not right; that hair should be allowed to grow but it should be kept clean and combed at least twice a day.[6][7]

Kara

Main article: Kara

Kara – one of the five articles of faith for the Sikhs
The Sikhs were commanded by Guru Gobind Singh at the Baisakhi Amrit Sanchar in 1699 to wear an iron bracelet called a Kara at all times. The kara is a constant reminder that whatever a person does with their hands has to be in keeping with the advice given by the Guru. The kara is an iron/steel circle to symbolize God as never-ending. It is a symbol of permanent bonding to the community, of being a link in the chain of Khalsa Sikhs (the word for link is Kari). The kara should be of a cheap metal, such as iron or steel, to show equality and so that nobody can be shown as more important than anybody else with the material of their kara.[6]

Kachhera

A Sikh wearing Kachera, after taking bath in the holy (perceived) water tank (Sarovar) at Golden Temple Amritsar.

Kachhera
Main article: Kacchera
ਸੀਲ ਜਤ ਕੀ ਕਛ ਪਹਿਰਿ ਪਕੜਿਓ ਹਥਿਆਰਾ ॥ The sign of true chastity is the Kachhera, you must wear this and hold weapons in hand.

—Bhai Gurdas Singh, Var. 41, pauri 15
The Kachhera is a shalwar-underwear with a tie-knot worn by Baptised Sikhs. Originally, the Kachhera was made part of the five Ks as a symbol of a Sikh soldier's willingness to be ready at a moment's notice for battle or for defense. The confirmed Sikh (one who has taken the Amrit) wears a Kachhera every day. Some of them go to the extent of wearing a Kachhera while bathing, to be ready at a moment's notice, changing into the new one a single leg at a time, so as to have no moment where they are unprepared. Further, this garment allowed the Sikh soldier to operate in combat freely and without any hindrance or restriction, because it was easy to fabricate, maintain, wash, and carry compared to other traditional undergarments of that era, like the dhoti. The Kachhera symbolizes self-respect, and always reminds the wearer of mental control over lust, one of the Five Evils in Sikh philosophy.

The Kachhera follows a generally practical and roomy design. It features an embedded string that circles the waist which can be tightened or loosened as desired and then knotted securely. The Kachhera can be classed between underwear and an outer garment, as in appearance it does not reveal private anatomy, and looks and wears like shorts. As with all of the Five Ks, there is equality between men and women, and so women are also expected to wear it. Considering the hot climate in India, the Kachhera is often worn by men as an outer garment, keeping the wearer cool and being practical in manual work such as farming, but it is generally not considered respectful for women to wear the Kacchera as an outer garment (on its own) as it is considered too revealing.[6]

Kirpan

Main article: Kirpan

19th century Indian tulwar sword

Siri Sahib ,one of five symbols of Sikhism ,Gurdwara Darbar Sahib Kartarpur ,Pakistan ਸ਼ਸਤਰ ਹੀਨ ਕਬਹੂ ਨਹਿ ਹੋਈ, ਰਿਹਤਵੰਤ ਖਾਲਸਾ ਸੋਈ ॥Those who never depart their arms, they are the Khalsa with excellent rehats.

—Rehatnama Bhai Desa Singh[citation needed]

The kirpan is a dagger that symbolises a Sikh's duty to come to the defense of those in peril. All Sikhs should wear the kirpan on their body at all times as a defensive side-arm, just as a police officer is expected to wear a side-arm when on duty. Its use is only allowed in the act of self-defense and the protection of others. It stands for bravery and protecting the weak and innocent.

The kirpan is kept sharp and is actually used to defend others, such as those who are oppressed by harsh rulers, or a person who is being robbed, raped, or beaten. The true Sikh cannot turn a blind eye to such evils, thinking that they are "someone else's concern."[7] It is the duty of the true Sikh to help those who suffer unjustly, by whatever means available, whether that means alerting the police, summoning help, or defending those who cannot defend themselves, even if that means putting oneself in harm's way.[6]

Panj Kapde

The Five Ks are the bare minimum and are not the full extent of Khalsa uniform; the Panj Kapde is also part of Khalsa uniform. It is part of the tradition of panj kapare (five garments), comprising dastaar (turban), hazooria (long white scarf worn around the neck), long chola (dress), kamar-kasaa (material tied around the waist like a belt) and kacchera (under-garment). Reference to this has been made by Varan Bhai Gurdas as well. The dastaar and kachera are mandatory for Sikhs although more spiritual Sikhs also have the other kapde.

Dastaar

A dastār (Punjabi: ਦਸਤਾਰ, from Persian: دستار) which derives from dast-e-yār or 'the hand of God',[citation needed] is an item of headwear associated with Sikhism, and is an important part of Sikh culture. The word is loaned from Persian through Punjabi. In Persian, the word dastār can refer to any kind of turban and replaced the original word for turban, dolband (دلبند), from which the English word is derived.

Among the Sikhs, the dastār is an article of faith that represents equality, honour, self-respect, courage, spirituality, and piety. The Khalsa Sikh men and women, who keep the Five Ks, wear the turban to cover their long, uncut hair (kesh). The Sikhs regard the dastār as an important part of the unique Sikh identity. After the ninth Sikh Guru, Tegh Bahadur, was sentenced to death by the Mughal emperor Aurangzeb, Guru Gobind Singh, the tenth Sikh Guru created the Khalsa and gave five articles of faith, one of which is unshorn hair, which the dastār covers.

Sikh chola

Sikh chola is traditional dress worn by Sikhs. It is a martial attire that gives freedom of movement to a Sikh warrior. Sikh chola is also unisex attire, and may also be decorated with heavy embroidery all over it. It is meant to be either yellow, white or electric blue with many pockets to hold matchlocks[8] and other weapons.

Kamar kasa

Kamar kasa is a sash bound around the waist to hold weapons an essential part of Nihang (Sikh warrior) dress. It is also called cumberband, belt, waist sash, or waistband. The Kamar kasa is meant to be yellow if wearing a blue chola or blue if wearing a white chola.

Hazooria

Nihang Sikhs wearing chakrams

A hazooria (scarf) is a sign of humility which is grasped during the Ardās. It is a constant reminder of surrendering one's mind to the Guru, along with the five Ks. A hazooria is practical: it helps one keep suchamta (cleanliness) during seva (service) or reading Gurbani (hymns). It can help keep the hands clean when touching the face or picking up objects. The hazooria was also worn by servants and symbolises the Sikh surrendering to Waheguruji as their master.

In the spiritual teachings of Kundalini Yoga as taught by Yogi Bhajan (which has ties to Sikh Dharma), the human being is comprised of ten interconnected bodies: one physical body, three mental bodies, and six energy bodies. These layers form the complete human energy field and each has a specific functional role and characteristic.

Here are the ten bodies and their functional roles:

1. Soul Body: This body represents your inner infinity and connection to your higher purpose. Its function is to guide you with humility and creativity, living from the heart rather than solely the intellect.
2. Negative Mind (Protective): The role of the negative mind is protective, acting as a "seatbelt" for the soul. It helps you to be discerning, assess potential dangers, and establish boundaries for your safety.
3. Positive Mind (Expansive): This mind is the expansive and inspirational aspect, seeing possibilities and the potential good in situations. When balanced, it fosters self-esteem, resourcefulness, and a hopeful perspective.
4. Neutral Mind (Meditative): Also called the meditative mind, it takes input from both the negative and positive minds, then uses intuition to provide unbiased, optimal guidance and lead you to the best decisions.
5. Physical Body: This is the physical manifestation that houses the other nine bodies and allows for interaction with the earthly plane. Its function is to translate karmic actions into dharmic actions (living your purpose).
6. Arc Body (Arcline): A line of energy extending from earlobe to earlobe (often depicted as a halo), this body is your projected persona and helps you focus and regulate your nervous system. It also acts as a shield, protecting you from negative energy projected by others.
7. Auric Body (Aura): This is the electromagnetic field of energy that surrounds the physical body, expanding up to nine feet in all directions. It contains your life force and acts as a primary protective shield, attracting positive things when strong.
8. Pranic Body: The Pranic Body controls the breath and draws prana, or the universe's life force energy, into your system. A strong Pranic Body ensures vitality, energy, and a resilient immune system; imbalance can lead to disease.
9. Subtle Body: This body allows you to perceive the subtlety of life and reality beyond the immediate physical world. It helps you to see the "bigger picture" with calmness and finesse.
10. Radiant Body: The final body gives you spiritual royalty, radiance, and charisma. A strong Radiant Body provides immense courage, a magnetic presence, and acts as a powerful shield against all challenges.

Balancing and strengthening these ten bodies through practices like Kundalini Yoga, meditation, and breathwork helps align the human energy field, leading to wholeness, clarity, and spiritual growth.

Introduction to the Ten Bodies

10-bodies-1

Leer en Español

This article is excerpted from Kundalini Yoga: The Flow of Eternal Power, written by Shakti Parwha Kaur Khalsa.

We know that we have a physical body. We can see it, touch it, feel it, and so can other people. But most of us are not aware that we have other bodies, which are equally real, if not more so. The funny thing is that we identify so strongly with our physical bodies, that we think of ourselves primarily in physical terms.

It seems as if the physical body becomes the focus of our whole identity. As important and valuable as the physical body is, it is not who we are, because who we are—our essential self—can never change.

You certainly don’t have the same physical body you were born with, yet you know you’re still you. You are not your body or your mind. You are much more permanent than that. Sat Nam isn’t born weighing six pounds-nine ounces, growing to 120 pounds; Sat Nam doesn’t get the measles, go through menopause, or worry about dry skin. Sat Nam is your eternal true identity. It is who you are, who you were, and who you will be, now and forever. Truth is your identity.

You might visualize your various bodies as layers of clothing, the physical body being the overcoat you wear for a lifetime. During your whole life, rain or shine, summer or winter, you never take it off, so you don't see the beautiful jacket or suit underneath, much less the dress or shirt under that. Until you develop a special kind of "x-ray" vision, you definitely never see the body that is wearing all those garments, which is the Soul.

1. The Soul Body.   The first body is the Soul Body. It is your very best friend. It is God's light which lives in your heart. The Soul Body never dies. It goes with you forever. It's a good idea to get acquainted with it as soon as possible and develop an ongoing communication. The best time to get the conversation going is during morning sadhana.

The Three Mental Bodies mind-lightHere's a brief summary of the three main aspects of the Mind, the body that many people mistakenly identify with.

2. The Negative Mind protects you by warning you what could be the danger or loss in any situation.

3. The Positive Mind inspires you by telling you what is the possible gain, the advantage to you, in any situation.

4. The Neutral Mind listens to the intellectual input from both the Negative Mind and the Positive Mind and then leads you to the best decision, using unbiased intuitive knowledge. Whenever you want to reach outside of yourself, reach out with your Neutral Mind. It is a most graceful, wonderful secret of success.

5. Physical Body

The Physical Body was given to you so you could participate fully in life on this planet. It is a temple for God to live in while He sees through your eyes and hears through your ears. You were given the physical body so God could experience and enjoy His creation. The physical is a balance point between heaven and earth. The key to perfecting the Physical Body is balance: balance in diet; balance in exercise; balance in work, play, and rest. It always makes sense to avoid extremes. Don't be lazy and don't be fanatic.

6. Arc Bodyauric-body

The Arc Body or Arcline is a line of energy that goes in an arc from ear tip to ear tip. It is sometimes called your "halo." This spiritual body projects who you are to other people without a word being spoken. It also protects you from negative energy directed towards you. Have you ever felt something, and turned around to find someone was staring at you? That's one experience of your arcline in action.

7. Auric Body

The Auric Body or Aura is a sphere of electromagnetic energy that surrounds the physical body. It can extend up to nine feet in every direction. This body protects you and also gives you the ability to uplift yourself and others. Some people can see the auric body as a field of flowing colored light. You may have experienced the auric body when you were near someone and simply felt their energy. Being in the aura of a spiritual and loving person is peaceful and healing. As the energy field of their aura interacts with ours, it automatically elevates us. (Remember, “Spirituality cannot be taught, it has to be caught, like the measles. You get it from someone who’s got it.”)

8. Pranic Body

The Pranic Body controls the breath and takes in Prana, the life force energy of the Universe. The Pranic Body gives you energy, courage, control over your mind, and healing power. When you breathe, you are feeding your Pranic Body. As you practice pranayam, you’ll experience the expansion and strength of this body.

subtle-body9. Subtle Body

The Subtle Body gives you the opportunity to understand and master the subtlety of life. It can help you understand what is going on around you and how things work. Those people who can tune into situations easily or pick up new skills as if by magic, have developed the Subtle Body.

As the Mahan Tantric, Yogi Bhajan has explained that he always teaches with his Subtle Body. We have experienced the projection of his powerful presence during his White Tantric Yoga® video courses. Even though his physical body may not be there, his Subtle Body most definitely is present and actively engaged with us.

10. Radiant Body

The Radiant Body gives you spiritual royalty and radiance. A strong Radiant Body will make you courageous in the face of any and every obstacle. Good things are drawn to you through a developed and powerful Radiant Body. On a practical level, people with well-developed Radiant Bodies are said to have “charisma.” Their very presence works for them before they say one word. They virtually “shine.”

Yogi Bhajan on the Ten Bodies

“You are a total combination of ten bodies. You have a Spiritual Body, you have three Mental Bodies (Negative, Positive, and Neutral); then you have this Physical Body, the Arc Body (which you call “halo”); and you have the simple Auric Body and a Subtle Body, Pranic Body, and a Radiant Body. These ten bodies are interlocked, but two are free to leave.

“Whenever the soul desires to leave the Physical Body, the Arc Body and all the other bodies remain behind because they have no combination. The Physical Body’s pranic connection with the Pranic Body totally breaks, and the Soul leaves with the Subtle Body. That means, your identity is gone. (Your physical body remains, but “you” are gone. We call it death.)

“But do you understand what that indicates? If, in subtlety you become very refined, and in activity you become very subtle, very subtle, you are very near to your Soul. The Spirit and the Subtle body are very much related. There’s a direct relationship between the Subtle body and the Spiritual body. They never leave each other. So, anything you do which is refined—refined art, refined acts, refined speech, anything which is not gross—will put you nearer to the Soul. That’s rather a simple way of reaching your God-consciousness.”

shaktiparwhak_200This article is excerpted from Kundalini Yoga: The Flow of Eternal Power, written by Shakti Parwha Kaur Khalsa.

Shakti Parwha Kaur Khalsa was Yogi Bhajan’s first student in the United States. He gave her the title of the Mother of 3HO. She started teaching Kundalini Yoga in 1969. She is the author of Kundalini Yoga: The Flow of Eternal Power; Kundalini Postures and Poetry; and Marriage on the Spiritual Path: Mastering the Highest Yoga. She left this earthly plane on November 8, 2023, at the age of 94.

For those that have difficulty seeing, do you have recordings of these teachings so we can listen to them? Thanks.

Sat Nam Rattan, I did a quick Google search for apps to read webpages to assist people who can’t see. This is what I found: “Apps like Speechify and Voice Dream Reader convert webpage text to speech, while built-in screen readers such as VoiceOver (Apple) and TalkBack (Android) provide system-wide assistance by reading screen content aloud. Other useful apps include Be My Eyes and Aira, which connect users with live or AI-powered assistance to describe images and objects on a webpage.” I hope this helps! Blessings to you!

What You Need To Know About Three Dantian Qi - Onenergy
A Dantian (or Qi|Qigong energy center) is a vital energy hub in traditional Chinese medicine and practices like Qigong, Tai Chi, and Taoist alchemy, often called the "elixir field," where life force (Qi) is stored, refined, and circulated, with the Lower Dantian (below the navel) being crucial for grounding, vitality, and core strength, while Middle Dantian (chest) governs emotions, and the Upper Dantian (forehead/third eye) relates to spirit/consciousness.
Key Concepts
Meaning: "Dan" (丹) means elixir or cinnabar, and "Tian" (田) means field, symbolizing a place to create spiritual or physical vitality.
Function: Dantians are centers for cultivating and storing Qi (life energy) for health, longevity, and spiritual development, akin to Indian chakras.
Dantian Breathing: A deep, diaphragmatic breath that expands the lower abdomen, activating the parasympathetic nervous system, promoting relaxation, and strengthening core muscles, unlike shallow chest breathing.
The Three Dantians
Lower Dantian (Xià Dāntián):
Location: Lower abdomen, 2-3 inches below the navel.
Focus: Grounding, physical stability, reproduction, vitality (Jing), and the base for martial arts power.
Middle Dantian (Zhōng Dāntián):
Location: Center of the chest, heart level.
Focus: Emotions, respiration, blood circulation, compassion (Qi).
Upper Dantian (Shàng Dāntián):
Location: Forehead, between the eyebrows (third eye area).
Focus: Spirit, consciousness, mental clarity (Shen).
Practice & Importance
Martial Arts: Focus on the lower dantian provides powerful, grounded, and efficient movement.
Meditation/Qigong: Cultivating the dantian through breath and focus refines energy, fostering physical health and spiritual growth.
Health Benefits: Promotes deep relaxation, increased oxygen intake, better energy, and mental calm.

Dantian (Ch. 丹田; Jap: tanden) in traditional Chinese medicine is a center of qi, the vital life force. [1][2]

Three main dantian are typically emphasized:[1][2] the lower dantian, situated at the lower belly, called hara in Japanese; the middle dantian, at the level of the heart; and the upper dantian, at the forehead between the eyebrows or third eye. Jing (essence) is purified into qi (vitality) in the lower dantiam; qi is refined into shen or spirit in the middle dantium; and shen is transmuted into wu wei or emptiness in the upper dantium.

The dantian are important focal points in traditional Chinese medicine, for meditative and esoteric practices such as qigong, neidan, neigong, daoyin, Taoist sexual practices, and reiki[3] and for martial arts such as tai chi.[1][2]

Etymology

Dantian (Ch. 丹田; Jap: tanden), loosely translated as "elixir field", "sea of qi", or simply "energy center."

The term dantian used by itself usually refers to the lower dantian. In Japanese, the word hara (腹; Chinese: fù), "abdomen," "belly," is often used interchangeably for the lower dantian (下丹田, Xià Dāntián). "Hara" should not be translated as "stomach," to avoid confusing it with the organ. An alternative Japanese reading of the character is Fuku, the Chinese reading is Fu.

Three dantians and the elixir-of-life

Different schools of thought categorize dantian in various manners. Three main dantian are typically emphasized, which are focal points for transmutation of the three treasures, namely jing, qi and shen:[1][2]

Lower dantian (下丹田, Xià Dāntián): at the crossing of the horizontal line behind the Ren-6 acupoint and vertical line above the perineum, which is also called "the golden stove" (金炉 pinyin: Jīn lú) or the namesake "elixir-of-life field" proper, where the process of developing the elixir by refining and purifying essence (jing) into vitality (qi) begins.[4]
Middle dantian (中丹田, Zhōng Dāntián): at the level of the heart, which is also called "the crimson palace", associated with storing spirit (shen) and with respiration and health of the internal organs, in particular the thymus gland. This cauldron is where vitality or qi is refined into shen or spirit.[5]
Upper dantian (上丹田, Shàng Dāntián): at the forehead between the eyebrows or third eye, which is also called "the muddy pellet", associated with the pineal gland. This cauldron is where shen or spirit is transmuted into wu wei or emptiness.[6][7]

Qi can be seen as a substance when it is stored in the form of jing, this can be refined by heating in these cauldrons into more rarefied states such as qi which is insubstantial and further still into shen which is more like the Western concept of mind although it is more often translated as "spirit".[6]

The lower dantian or hara

In Chinese, Korean, and Japanese traditions, the lower dantian or hara is considered to be the physical center of gravity of the human body, and the seat of one's internal energy (qi). It is considered to be the foundation of rooted standing, grounding, breathing, and body awareness in Chinese and other martial arts including qigong. The lower dantian has been described to be "like the root of the tree of life."[2]

The lower dantian is particularly important as the focal point of breathing technique as well as the centre of balance and gravity. Taoist and Buddhist teachers often instruct their students to centre the mind in the navel or lower dantian. This is believed to aid control of thoughts and emotions. Acting from the dantian is considered to be related to higher states of awareness including sanmei (三昧) or ding (定).

Historically the first detailed description of the lower Dantian is in the Laozi zhongjing from the 3rd century CE, which refers to the elixir-of-life field where "essence" and "spirit" are stored; it is related to regeneration and sexual energy, menstruation and semen.[8]

A master of Japanese acupuncture,[9] calligraphy, swordsmanship, tea ceremony, martial arts, among other arts, is held in the Japanese tradition to be "acting from the hara."

Lower dantian in Eastern body-mind therapies

The lower dantian in traditional Chinese Medicine is where the primordial essence, Jing (精), is stored. At the same time, the lower dantian is the place for Yuan qi (元氣), the Qi that has not yet been divided into Yin Qi or Yang Qi. This Qi is much less physical and could be seen as the elemental existence of atoms and electrons before there are molecules. In the Ancient Texts of the Book of the Yellow Emperor (Huangdi Neijing), the lower Dan Tian is referred to as both the seat of Jing (精) and the source of Yuan qi (元氣). Both can also be used side by side as an apparent contradiction. The lower dantian is the basis of all life—of the body (Jing 精), of the mind (shen, 神), of the energy of life (qi, 氣), of self-preservation, of self-healing capacity, of emotions with the basic fear / fear of life as a foundation.

In eastern medicine the Hara is seen as an area that reflects the state of all the organs (physically palpable in the abdomen or not), their energetic as well as their physical state, and their complex functional relationships with each other.[10] A number of Eastern therapies explicitly focus on the hara in their work, amongst them acupuncture, Anma, Ampuku,[11] Shiatsu[12] and QiGong.[13]

Japanese physicians and medical therapists use the abdomen (hara) in diagnosis to determine the health or otherwise of the patient, particularly, but not exclusively, the state of the abdominal organs or tissues and the related energy fields.[14]

In diagnosis and treatment, the hara is partitioned in areas, each of which is considered to represent one of the (ten, eleven or twelve) vital organs and their functional energy fields. The details of this basic model of Hara diagnosis may differ from school to school.[15][16]

A number of body-mind therapies have been introduced to or developed in the West, which seem to be influenced by concepts directly or indirectly derived from or related to Eastern models of abdominal diagnosis and therapy, some using breathing techniques (Buteyko, Yoga), postural alignment and movement education like Postural Integration, Feldenkrais, Alexander Technique, Qigong and Yoga, or manual manipulation like Osteopathy, Shiatsu and massage. All aim to relax, strengthen and support in their function the internal organs and tissues in, above and below the Hara.

Hara in the martial arts

The hara or lower dantian is important in the Chinese and Japanese martial arts,[17] which emphasise the importance of "moving from the hara",[18] i.e. moving from the centre of one's very being – body and mind. There are a large number of breathing exercises in traditional Japanese and Chinese martial arts where attention is always kept on the dantian or hara to strengthen the "Sea of Qi".

How to Use a Feng Shui Bagua Map

The Bagua (八卦, "eight symbols") is a fundamental concept in Chinese philosophy, cosmology, and practices like Feng Shui and Baguazhang martial arts, representing the eight fundamental principles of reality through trigrams of solid (yang) and broken (yin) lines, used to map life aspects (wealth, family, career, etc.) onto spaces or analyze cosmic changes for balance and harmony.

In Feng Shui (Energy Mapping)
What it is: An octagonal or square grid applied to a floor plan to divide it into nine areas (including a center) representing life aspects like fame, relationships, and wealth.
How it works: Each area corresponds to specific colors, elements (wood, fire, earth, metal, water), and energies (yin/yang).
Purpose: To analyze and enhance the chi (energy) of a space by adjusting decor and objects in each section to support goals in that area of life.
In Taoist Cosmology & I Ching (Divination)
The Trigrams: Eight unique combinations of three lines (unbroken for yang, broken for yin) that represent natural forces (Heaven, Earth, Water, Fire, Wind, Thunder, Mountain, Lake).
The I Ching: Composed of 64 hexagrams, formed by combining two trigrams, used for divination and understanding change.
Arrangements: Two main sequences, the Early Heaven (primordial) and Later Heaven (manifested), show archetypal and cyclical orders, respectively.
In Martial Arts (Baguazhang)
Concept: A Chinese internal martial art (neijia) focused on circular walking and constant coiling/uncoiling movements.
Goal: To generate immense power by spiraling energy and adapting to an opponent's movements, integrating the principles of yin/yang and the Bagua's cyclical nature.
Key Takeaway
The Bagua is a versatile framework from ancient China that uses eight symbolic patterns (trigrams) to understand the interconnectedness of life, energy, and the universe, finding application in spatial design (Feng Shui), spiritual wisdom (I Ching), and physical discipline (martial arts).

The Bagua mirror, born from Fuxi’s ancient insights, is more than feng shui ornament. It’s a shield, a magnet, and a compass in one. Hung from eaves or walls, it watches silently over homes and alleyways. A convex mirror deflects malice, a concave one draws fortune, while the Tai Chi variant harmonizes energies. Crafted from jade, these mirrors pulse with belief, legacy, and intent. 1/2

Bagua diagram explanation from Zhao Huiqian's 六書本義; Liùshū běnyì, 1370s
The bagua (Chinese: 八卦; pinyin: bāguà; lit. 'eight trigrams') is a set of symbols from China intended to illustrate the nature of reality as comprising mutually opposing forces reinforcing one another. Bagua is a group of trigrams—composed of three lines, each either "broken" or "unbroken", which represent yin and yang, respectively.[1] Each line having two possible states allows for a total of 23 = 8 trigrams, whose early enumeration and characterization in China has had an effect on the history of Chinese philosophy and cosmology.

The trigrams are related to the divination practice as described within the I Ching and practiced as part of the Shang and Zhou state religion, as well as with the concepts of taiji and the five elements within traditional Chinese metaphysics.[citation needed] The trigrams have correspondences in astronomy, divination, meditation, astrology, geography, geomancy (feng shui), anatomy, decorative arts, the family, martial arts (particularly tai chi and baguazhang), Chinese medicine and elsewhere.[2][3]

The bagua can appear singly or in combination, and is commonly encountered in two different arrangements: the Primordial (先天八卦), "Earlier Heaven",[4] or "Fuxi" bagua (伏羲八卦), which is so named according the legend of Fuxi being the first primordial being to identify the eight trigrams;[5] and the Manifested (後天八卦), "Later Heaven",[4] or "King Wen" bagua, which arose recorded Chinese history.

In the I Ching, two trigrams are stacked together to create a six-line figure known as a hexagram. There are 64 possible permutations. The 64 hexagrams and their descriptions make up the book. The trigram symbolism can be used to interpret the hexagram figure and text. An example from Hexagram 19 commentary is "The earth above the lake: The image of Approach. Thus the superior man is inexhaustible in his will to teach, and without limits in his tolerance and protection of the people."[6] The trigrams have been used to organize Yijing charts as seen below.

Relation to other principles

The Scripture of Changes 易經 (I Ching) listed two sources for the eight trigrams. Its chapter Xì Cí shàng; 'Great Treatise Beginning' explains the first source thus:[11][12]

The great-axis produces the paired forces,
The paired forces produce the four aspects,
the four aspects produce the eight ways.

Tài Jí (太極) Great Axis

Taiji is the encapsulation of all the universe, space and time.

It is derived from Wújí 無極 (without axis) the formless, dimensionless, limitless, unbounded, infinite void.

When the formless void began to stir and move, Taiji came into being.

Liǎng Yí (兩儀) Dual Powers
The beginning of the universe begot the twin forces:

⚋ yīn (trad. 陰 / simp. 阴) dark, original, central, passive
⚊ yáng (trad. 陽 / simp. 阳) bright, extreme, furthest, active
Sì Xiàng (四像) Four Aspects
The twin powers produce four aspects named:

⚌ great yang 太陽 tàiyáng
⚎ lesser yang 少陽 shǎoyáng
⚍ lesser yin 少陰 shǎoyīn
⚏ great yin 太陰 tàiyīn
The four aspects are the differing levels of energy in world. Primarily they are associated with the solar terms, the two solstices and the two equinoxes. Being aspects they are also associated with the four main compass directions. Each direction is associated with a level of solar energy, and a mythological animal.

⚌ great yang 太陽 tàiyáng, Summer Solstice (longest day), South (most sun), Red Bird
⚎ lesser yang 少陽 shǎoyáng, Spring Equinox (increasing day), East (increasing sun), Blue Dragon
⚍ lesser yin 少陰 shǎoyīn, Fall Equinox (increasing night), West (decreasing sun), White Tiger
⚏ great yin 太陰 tàiyīn, Winter Solstice (longest night), North (least sun), Black Tortoise
Bā Guà (八卦) Eight Passages

Derivation of the bagua
The four phenomena act through the eight gates (bā guà):

☰ Heaven 乾; Qián, warming
☳ Thunder 震; Zhèn, storming
☵ Water 坎; Kǎn, pooling
☶ Mountain 艮; Gèn, jutting
☴ Wind 巽; Xùn, dispersing
☲ Fire 離; Lí, dancing
☱ Lake 兌; Duì, engulfing
☷ Earth 坤; Kūn, resting
Another chapter, 說卦; Shuō Guà; 'Discussing the Trigrams', characterizes the relationship of the trigrams as being:

乾; Qián ☰ Heaven, Father
坤; Kūn ☷ Earth, Mother who have three sons:

震; Zhèn ☳ Thunder, 1st Son
坎; Kǎn, ☵ Water, 2nd Son
艮; Gèn ☶ Mountain, 3rd Son and have three daughters:

巽; Xùn ☴ Wind, 1st Daughter
離; Lí ☲ Fire, 2nd Daughter
兑; Duì ☱ Lake, 3rd Daughter
The son trigrams all have a single ⚊ yáng line in their formation. The Yang trigrams correspond to odd numbers 1, 3, 5, 7.

The daughter trigrams all have a single ⚋ yīn line in their formation. The Yin trigrams correspond to even numbers 0, 2, 4, 6.

Wǔxíng (五行) Five Phases
The trigrams are related to the five phases of the Wuxing. The phases are: Water, Wood, Fire, Earth and Metal.

The major qualities associated with the 5 phases are:

Water - Receding
Fire - Bursting
Earth - Resting
Wood - Growing
Metal - Contracting
These qualities are associated with the seasons.

Water is associated with mid winter, the time of lowest energy.
Fire is associated with mid summer, the time of highest energy.
Earth is the pivot or balanced energy, either given as late summer, or as a brief transitional period between the seasons, where they are neither obviously one quality or the next.
Wood is associated with the spring time, burst with life and increasing sunshine.
Metal with the fall, life is slowing down, the days are shortening, and both men and creatures are taking precaution by storing food, and preparing for winter.
Typically the trigram-to-phase correspondences are given as follows:

The phase of Water 水 only corresponds with the trigram of the Deep 坎; Kǎn.
The phase of Fire 火 only corresponds with the trigram of Flame 離; Lí.

The phase of Earth or Soil 土 corresponds with the trigrams of Earth 坤; Kūn and Mountain 艮; Gèn.

The phase of Wood 木 corresponds with the trigrams of Wind 巽; Xùn and Thunder 震; Zhèn.

The phase of Metal or Gold 金 corresponds with the trigrams of Heaven 乾; Qián and Lake 兑; Duì.[13]

Notably, more than just their seasonal correspondence, the elements have interactions with each other and relationships of promoting and subverting other elements, as well as reversals where there is insufficiency in one element, resulting in an unbalanced relationship giving unexpected results where it should normally promote or subvert another element, but gives the opposite effect.

The wuxing and its promoting/subverting relationship system is also used as a frame work for understanding the relationships in spacial features in feng shui as well as the relationships between the organ systems in traditional Chinese medicine.

Liùshísì Guà (六十四卦) Sixty-Four Hexagrams

Eight trigrams stacked atop another eight trigrams give sixty-four variations of hexagrams, with the dominant quality above, and the secondary quality below. These sixty four hexagrams make up the main body of the Yijing oracle used for divination. The Yijing itself gives a pithy explanation for each hexagram.

The ways can be thought of as eight main expectations, and each variation is an outcome either typical, inverted; promoted, subverted; nurtured, neglected; surprised or disappointed; depending on circumstance. The sixty-four hexagrams give many possibility for how an endeavor may turn out.

Diviners consulting the Yijing oracle use a variety of methods to elicit a response from the oracle, such as throwing yarrow stalks, tossing coins, pulling cards from a deck, or consulting exterior signs, such as examining the shapes of sacrificed animal entrails, examining the cracking patterns of bones tossed into a fire, observing the flight path of startled birds, etc.

In feng shui

The bagua is a tool in the majority of feng shui schools. The bagua used in feng shui can appear in two different versions: the Earlier Heaven bagua, used for burial sites, and the Later Heaven bagua, used for residences.

Pre-Natal Bagua

Primordial bagua is also known as Fuxi bagua or Earlier Heaven bagua. Named after the mythological first emperor of China. In the Preface of Shang Shu by Kong Anguo, he writes that "In ancient times, Fu Xi ruled the whole world. It was he who began to draw Eight Trigrams and to create Scripts in order to substitute the system of tying knots."[14] In traditional Chinese medicine, this sequence is known as the prenatal sequence and is used to understand familial risk for illness or disease, similar to western medicine's understanding of formative medicine and the study of genetics. The Heaven trigram is at the top, the Earth trigram is at the bottom (the South was located at the top in Chinese maps of this period) of the bagua. The Fire trigram is located on the left, while the Water trigram is on the right. Thunder and wind form another pair, being the opposites of each other; the first is on the bottom left next to fire, while the second is next to Heaven on the top right of the bagua. Mountain and Lake form the last pair, with one opposite to the other. The adjustment of the trigrams is symmetrical by forming exact contrary pairs. They symbolize the opposite forces of Yin and Yang and represent a state in which everything is in balance.

Post-Natal Bagua

The sequence of trigrams in the Later Heaven bagua is attributed to King Wen. It is also known as the postnatal bagua arrangement in traditional Chinese medicine; it is used to understand physical, emotional and environmental patterns that influence health or disease, similarly to western medicine's inquiry into functional medical science.[15] In this arrangement, Water is placed downwards and Fire at the top; Thunder is in the East, while Lake is in the West. Contrary to the Earlier Heaven bagua, the Later Heaven bagua is dynamic; energies and the aspects of each of its trigrams flow towards the following. It is the sequence used by the Luo Pan compass, which is used in feng shui and referred to as the manifest pattern; it analyzes the movement of the qi that practitioners believe affect them.

Western bagua

The popularity of feng shui increased in the West because of the bagua of the eight aspirations. Each trigram corresponds to an aspect of life that also corresponds to one of the cardinal directions. Applying feng shui using the bagua of the eight aspirations (or bagua map for short) made it possible to simplify feng shui and to use it for the general public. Western bagua focuses more heavily on intention than the traditional forms of feng shui.[16]

Experienced practicers of traditional feng shui disregard Western bagua[17] for its simplicity, since it does not take into account the forms of the landscape, time, or the annual cycles. The bagua of the eight aspirations is divided into two branches: the first, which uses the compass and cardinal directions, and the second, which uses the bagua by using the main door.

A bagua map is a tool used in Western forms of feng shui to map a room or location and see how the different sections correspond to different aspects in one's life. These sections are believed to relate to every area or aspect of life and are divided into categories such as fame, relationships/marriage, children/creativity, helpful people/travel, career, inner knowledge, family/ancestors/health, and wealth/blessings.

In this system, the map is intended to be used over the land, one's home, office or desk to find areas lacking good chi, and to show where there are spaces that may need rectifying or enhancing in life or the environment.

For example, if the bagua grid is placed over an entire house plan and it shows the toilet, bathroom, laundry, or kitchen in the wealth/blessings area of the map, it would be said that the money coming into that particular environment would disappear very fast.

Modern usage

In traditional Chinese medicine, including the profession of acupuncture, the Earlier Heaven and Later Heaven arrangements are used to understand the pathogenesis of disease or illness and to select treatment plans specifically related and tailored to a patient's constitution.[18]

The Flag of South Korea has the four cardinal trigrams (qian, kun, kan, li) surrounding the taegeuk, or taijitu. These are specific representations of the movement and harmony of yin and yang. These trigrams were also depicted on the commissioning pennant of the South Korean Navy.

The Vesica Piscis and Flower of Life are foundational patterns in Sacred Geometry, seen in mystery schools as universal blueprints for creation, representing divine unity, balance, and the unfolding of existence from a single source. The Vesica Piscis (two overlapping circles forming a lens/almond) is the genesis point, encoding fundamental math (sqrt 2, 3, 5) and birthing the Seed of Life, which then expands into the complex, interconnected Flower of Life, symbolizing the cosmos, consciousness, and the interconnectedness of all things.
Vesica Piscis: The Womb of Geometry
Formation: Two identical circles intersecting so each center lies on the other's circumference.
Meaning: Represents the union of opposites (divine masculine/feminine, heaven/earth), the womb, balance, and the "fish bladder" (Latin: vesica piscis).
Significance: Contains the blueprints for basic shapes (triangle, square, pentagon) and mathematical ratios, making it the "mother of geometry".
Seed of Life: First Steps of Creation
Formation: Six overlapping circles forming a six-petal flower within the Vesica Piscis.
Meaning: Represents the seven days of creation (Genesis), the formation of the Trinity, and the initial cosmic blueprint.
Flower of Life: The Universal Matrix
Formation: A complex, repeating hexagonal pattern of overlapping circles, built from the Seed of Life.
Meaning: Symbolizes the interconnectedness of all life, the universe's blueprint, evolution of consciousness, and the divine creator.
Applications: Used by mystics, artists (like Leonardo da Vinci), and in various spiritual traditions to understand cosmic order.
Mystery School Connection
These patterns are seen as keys to understanding the universe's underlying structure, used to teach spiritual truths about unity, vibration, and the manifestation of form from spirit, linking ancient wisdom to universal laws.

What You Need To Know About Three Dantian Qi - Onenergy
A Dantian (or Qi|Qigong energy center) is a vital energy hub in traditional Chinese medicine and practices like Qigong, Tai Chi, and Taoist alchemy, often called the "elixir field," where life force (Qi) is stored, refined, and circulated, with the Lower Dantian (below the navel) being crucial for grounding, vitality, and core strength, while Middle Dantian (chest) governs emotions, and the Upper Dantian (forehead/third eye) relates to spirit/consciousness.
Key Concepts
Meaning: "Dan" (丹) means elixir or cinnabar, and "Tian" (田) means field, symbolizing a place to create spiritual or physical vitality.
Function: Dantians are centers for cultivating and storing Qi (life energy) for health, longevity, and spiritual development, akin to Indian chakras.
Dantian Breathing: A deep, diaphragmatic breath that expands the lower abdomen, activating the parasympathetic nervous system, promoting relaxation, and strengthening core muscles, unlike shallow chest breathing.
The Three Dantians
Lower Dantian (Xià Dāntián):
Location: Lower abdomen, 2-3 inches below the navel.
Focus: Grounding, physical stability, reproduction, vitality (Jing), and the base for martial arts power.
Middle Dantian (Zhōng Dāntián):
Location: Center of the chest, heart level.
Focus: Emotions, respiration, blood circulation, compassion (Qi).
Upper Dantian (Shàng Dāntián):
Location: Forehead, between the eyebrows (third eye area).
Focus: Spirit, consciousness, mental clarity (Shen).
Practice & Importance
Martial Arts: Focus on the lower dantian provides powerful, grounded, and efficient movement.
Meditation/Qigong: Cultivating the dantian through breath and focus refines energy, fostering physical health and spiritual growth.
Health Benefits: Promotes deep relaxation, increased oxygen intake, better energy, and mental calm.

The universe speaks to you in subtle ways, and today it has chosen a mantra just for you. On the screen, multiple mantras appear, but when you tap, one will reveal itself — that is your mantra for the day. It carries the vibration you most need right now, aligned with your energy and current life path. Chant this mantra during meditation, slowly and with full attention. Let it awaken the inner currents, dissolve mental blocks, and connect you with the higher forces guiding your journey. Even a few minutes of focus will amplify clarity, calm, and subtle protection around you. This simple act of listening to the universe and following its guidance strengthens your inner alignment. Receive your mantra, honor it, and let it flow through your mind, heart, and actions today. Clockwise from upper left: Om (an ancient Vedic mantra used in Hinduism and Buddhism); the Ṇamōkāra mantra (the most important mantra in Jainism); the Vajrayana Buddhist E-VAM mantra, known as the Kalachakra "Tenfold Powerful One"; the Hare Krishna mantra in a modern concert setting; Om mani padme hum (a popular Buddhist mantra) in Tianjin Temple (Ranjana script).
A mantra (/ˈmæntrə, ˈmʌn-/ MAN-trə, MUN-;[1] Pali: mantra) or mantram (Devanagari: मन्त्रम्)[2] is a sacred utterance, a numinous sound, a syllable, word or phonemes, or group of words (most often in an Indo-Iranian language like Sanskrit or Avestan) believed by practitioners to have religious, magical or spiritual powers.[3][4] Some mantras have a syntactic structure and a literal meaning, while others do not.[3][5]

ॐ, ॐ (Aum, Om) serves as an important mantra in various Indian religions. Specifically, it is an example of a seed syllable mantra (bijamantra). It is believed to be the first sound in Hinduism and as the sonic essence of the absolute divine reality. Longer mantras are phrases with several syllables, names and words. These phrases may have spiritual interpretations such as a name of a deity, a longing for truth, reality, light, immortality, peace, love, knowledge, and action.[3][6] Examples of longer mantras include the Gayatri Mantra, the Hare Krishna mantra, Om Namah Shivaya, the Mani mantra, the Mantra of Light, the Namokar Mantra, and the Mūl Mantar. Mantras without any actual linguistic meaning are still considered to be musically uplifting and spiritually meaningful.[7]

The use, structure, function, importance, and types of mantras vary according to the school and philosophy of Jainism, Buddhism, Hinduism, Zoroastrianism, and Sikhism.[4][8] A common practice is japa, the meditative repetition of a mantra, usually with the aid of a mala (prayer beads). Mantras serve a central role in the Indian tantric traditions, which developed elaborate yogic methods which make use of mantras.[7][9] In tantric religions (often called "mantra paths", Sanskrit: Mantranāya or Mantramarga), mantric methods are considered to be the most effective path. Ritual initiation (abhiseka) into a specific mantra and its associated deity is often a requirement for reciting certain mantras in these traditions. However, in some religious traditions, initiation is not always required for certain mantras, which are open to all.[10][6]

The word mantra is also used in English to refer to something that is said frequently and is deliberately repeated over and over.

Etymology and origins

The earliest mention of mantras is found in the Vedas of ancient India and the Avesta of ancient Iran.[11] Both Sanskrit mántra and the equivalent Avestan mąθra go back to the common Proto-Indo-Iranian *mantram, consisting of the Indo-European *men "to think" and the instrumental suffix *trom.[12][13][14][15][16] Due to the linguistic and functional similarities, they must go back to the common Indo-Iranian period, commonly dated to around 2000 BCE.[17][18]

Scholars[3][7] consider the use of mantras to have begun in India before 1000 BC. By the middle Vedic period (1000 BC to 500 BC) – claims Frits Staal – mantras in Hinduism had developed into a blend of art and science.[7]

The Chinese translation is 真言; zhenyan; 'true words', the Japanese on'yomi reading of the Chinese being shingon (which is also used as the proper name for the Shingon sect). According to Alex Wayman and Ryujun Tajima, "Zhenyan" (or "Shingon") means "true speech", has the sense of "an exact mantra which reveals the truth of the dharmas", and is the path of mantras.[19][20]

According to Bernfried Schlerath, the concept of sātyas mantras is found in Indo-Iranian Yasna 31.6 and the Rigveda, where it is considered structured thought in conformity with the reality or poetic (religious) formulas associated with inherent fulfillment.[21]

Definition

Mantras written on a rock near Namche Bazaar Nepal

There is no generally accepted definition of mantra.[22] As a result, there is a long history of scholarly disagreement on the meaning of mantras and whether they are instruments of mind, as implied by the etymological origin of the word mantra. One school suggests mantras are mostly meaningless sound constructs, while the other holds them to be mostly meaningful linguistic instruments of mind.[6] Both schools agree that mantras have melody and a well designed mathematical precision in their construction and that their influence on the reciter and listener is similar to that is observed in people around the world listening to their beloved music that is devoid of words.[3][7]

In Oxford Living Dictionary mantra is defined as a word or sound repeated to aid concentration in meditation.[23] Cambridge Dictionary provides two different definitions. The first refers to Hinduism and Buddhism: a word or sound that is believed to have a special spiritual power. The second definition is more general: a word or phrase that is often repeated and expresses a particularly strong belief. For instance, a football team can choose individual words as their own "mantra."[24]

Louis Renou has defined mantra as a thought.[25] Mantras are structured formulae of thoughts, claims Silburn.[26] Farquhar concludes that mantras are a religious thought, prayer, sacred utterance, but also believed to be a spell or weapon of supernatural power.[27] Zimmer defines mantra as a verbal instrument to produce something in one's mind.[28] Agehananda Bharati defines mantra, in the context of the Tantric school of Hinduism, to be a combination of mixed genuine and quasi-morphemes arranged in conventional patterns, based on codified esoteric traditions, passed on from a guru to a disciple through prescribed initiation.[29]

Jan Gonda, a widely cited scholar on Indian mantras,[30] defines mantra as general name for the verses, formulas or sequence of words in prose which contain praise, are believed to have religious, magical or spiritual efficiency, which are meditated upon, recited, muttered or sung in a ritual, and which are collected in the methodically arranged ancient texts of Hinduism.[31] By comparing the Old Indic Vedic and Old Iranian Avestan traditions, Gonda concludes that in the oldest texts, mantras were "means of creating, conveying, concentrating and realizing intentional and efficient thought, and of coming into touch or identifying oneself with the essence of the divinity".[3] In some later schools of Hinduism, Gonda suggests a mantra is sakti (power) to the devotee in the form of formulated and expressed thought.[3]

Frits Staal clarifies that mantras are not rituals, they are what is recited or chanted during a ritual.[7] Staal[7] presents a non-linguistic view of mantras. He suggests that verse mantras are metered and harmonized to mathematical precision (for example, in the viharanam technique), which resonate, but a lot of them are a hodgepodge of meaningless constructs such as are found in folk music around the world. Staal cautions that there are many mantras that can be translated and do have spiritual meaning and philosophical themes central to Hinduism, but that does not mean all mantras have a literal meaning. He further notes that even when mantras do not have a literal meaning, they do set a tone and ambiance in the ritual as they are recited, and thus have a straightforward and uncontroversial ritualistic meaning.[7] The sounds may lack literal meaning, but they can have an effect. He compares mantras to bird songs, that have the power to communicate, yet do not have a literal meaning.[33] On that saman category of Hindu mantras, which Staal described as resembling the arias of Bach's oratorios and other European classics, he notes that these mantras have musical structure, but they almost always are completely different from anything in the syntax of natural languages. Mantras are literally meaningless, yet musically meaningful to Staal.[34] The saman chant mantras were transmitted from one Hindu generation to next verbally for over 1000 years but never written, a feat, suggests Staal, that was made possible by the strict mathematical principles used in constructing the mantras. These saman chant mantras are also mostly meaningless, cannot be literally translated as Sanskrit or any Indian language, but nevertheless are beautiful in their resonant themes, variations, inversions, and distribution.[7] They draw the devotee in. Staal is not the first person to view Hindu mantras in this manner. The ancient Hindu Vedic ritualist Kautsa was one of the earliest scholars to note that mantras are meaningless; their function is phonetic and syntactic, not semantic.[35]

Harvey Alper[36] and others[37] present mantras from the linguistic point view. They admit Staal's observation that many mantras do contain bits and pieces of meaningless jargon, but they question what language or text doesn't. The presence of an abracadabra bit does not necessarily imply the entire work is meaningless. Alper lists numerous mantras that have philosophical themes, moral principles, a call to virtuous life, and even mundane petitions. He suggests that from a set of millions of mantras, the devotee chooses some mantras voluntarily, thus expressing that speaker's intention, and the audience for that mantra is that speaker's chosen spiritual entity. Mantras deploy the language of spiritual expression, they are religious instruments, and that is what matters to the devotee. A mantra creates a feeling in the practicing person. It has an emotive numinous effect, it mesmerizes, it defies expression, and it creates sensations that are by definition private and at the heart of all religions and spiritual phenomena.[3][29][38]

History
During the early Vedic period, Vedic poets became fascinated by the inspirational power of poems, metered verses, and music. They referred to them with the root dhi-, which evolved into the dhyana (meditation) of Hinduism, and the language used to start and assist this process manifested as a mantra.[7] By the middle vedic period (1000 BC to 500 BC), mantras were derived from all vedic compositions. They included ṛc (verses from Rigveda for example), sāman (musical chants from the Sāmaveda for example), yajus (a muttered formula from the yajurveda for example), and nigada (a loudly spoken yajus). During the Hindu Epics period and after, mantras multiplied in many ways and diversified to meet the needs and passions of various schools of Hinduism.[39] In the Linga Purana, Mantra is listed as one of the 1,008 names of Lord Shiva.[40]

Numerous ancient mantras are found in the Saṃhitā portion of the Vedas. The Saṃhitās are the most ancient layer of the Vedas, and contain numerous mantras, hymns, prayers, and litanies.[41] The Rigveda Samhita contains about 10552 Mantras, classified into ten books called Mandalas. A Sukta is a group of Mantras.[42] Mantras come in many forms, including ṛc (verses from the Rigveda for example) and sāman (musical chants from the Sāmaveda for example).[3][7]

In Hindu tradition, Vedas are sacred scriptures which were revealed (and not composed) by the seers (Rishis). According to the ancient commentator and linguist, Yaska, these ancient sacred revelations were then passed down through an oral tradition and are considered to be the foundation for the Hindu tradition.[42]

Mantras took a center stage in Tantric traditions,[39] which made extensive ritual and meditative use of mantras, and posited that each mantra is a deity in sonic form.[9]

Function and structure

One function of mantras is to solemnize and ratify rituals.[43] Each mantra, in Vedic rituals, is coupled with an act. According to Apastamba Srauta Sutra, each ritual act is accompanied by one mantra, unless the Sutra explicitly marks that one act corresponds to several mantras. According to Gonda,[44] and others,[45] there is a connection and rationale between a Vedic mantra and each Vedic ritual act that accompanies it. In these cases, the function of mantras was to be an instrument of ritual efficacy for the priest, and a tool of instruction for a ritual act for others.

Over time, as the Puranas and Epics were composed, the concepts of worship, virtues and spirituality evolved in Hinduism and new schools of Hinduism were founded, each continuing to develop and refine its own mantras. In Hinduism, suggests Alper,[46] the function of mantras shifted from the quotidian to redemptive. In other words,[47] in Vedic times, mantras were recited a practical, quotidian goal as intention, such as requesting a deity's help in the discovery of lost cattle, cure of illness, succeeding in competitive sport or journey away from home. The literal translation of Vedic mantras suggests that the function of mantra, in these cases, was to cope with the uncertainties and dilemmas of daily life. In a later period of Hinduism,[48] mantras were recited with a transcendental redemptive goal as intention, such as escape from the cycle of life and rebirth, forgiveness for bad karma, and experiencing a spiritual connection with the god. The function of mantras, in these cases, was to cope with the human condition as a whole. According to Alper,[6] redemptive spiritual mantras opened the door for mantras where every part need not have a literal meaning, but together their resonance and musical quality assisted the transcendental spiritual process. Overall, explains Alper, using

Śivasūtra mantras as an example, Hindu mantras have philosophical themes and are metaphorical with social dimension and meaning; in other words, they are a spiritual language and instrument of thought.[48]

According to Staal,[7] Hindu mantras may be spoken aloud, anirukta (not enunciated), upamsu (inaudible), or manasa (not spoken, but recited in the mind). In ritual use, mantras are often silent instruments of meditation.

Invocation

For almost every mantra, there are six limbs called Shadanga.[49] These six limbs are: Seer (Rishi), Deity (Devata), Seed (Beeja), Energy (Shakti), Poetic Meter (chanda), and Lock (Kilaka).

Methods

The most basic mantra is Om, which in Hinduism is known as the "pranava mantra," the source of all mantras. The Hindu philosophy behind this is the premise that before existence and beyond existence is only One reality, Brahman, and the first manifestation of Brahman expressed as Om. For this reason, Om is considered as a foundational idea and reminder, and thus is prefixed and suffixed to all Hindu prayers. While some mantras may invoke individual gods or principles, fundamental mantras such as Shanti Mantra, the Gayatri Mantra and others ultimately focus on the One reality.

Japa

Main article: Japa
Mantra japa is a practice of repetitively uttering the same mantra[50] for an auspicious number of times, the most popular being 108, and sometimes just 5, 10, 28 or 1008.[3][51] Japa is found in personal prayer or meditative efforts of some Hindus, as well during formal puja (group prayers). Japa is assisted by malas (bead necklaces) containing 108 beads and a head bead (sometimes referred to as the 'meru', or 'guru' bead); the devotee using their fingers to count each bead as they repeat the chosen mantra. Having reached 108 repetitions, if they wish to continue another cycle of mantras, the devotee turns the mala around without crossing the head bead and repeats the cycle.[52] Japa-yajna is claimed to be most effective if the mantra is repeated silently in mind (manasah).[51]

According to this school, any shloka from holy Hindu texts like the Vedas, Upanishads, Bhagavad Gita, Yoga Sutra, even the Mahabharata, Ramayana, Durga saptashati or Chandi is a mantra, thus can be part of the japa, repeated to achieve a numinous effect.[53][54][55] The Dharmasāstra claims that the Gāyatri mantra, derived from Rig Veda verse 3.62.10, and the Puruṣasūkta mantra, from Rig Veda verse 10.90, are the most auspicious mantras for japa at sunrise and sunset; it is claimed to purify the mind and spirit.[3]

Kirtan (chanting)

Kirtan is a more musical form of mantric practice. It is a common method in the bhakti traditions, such as Gaudiya Vaishnavism.[56] Kirtan includes call and response forms of chanting accompanied by various Indian instruments (such as the tabla, mrdanga and harmonium), and it may also include dancing and theatrical performance.[57][58][59] Kirtan is also common in Sikhism.

Tantric

Tantric Hindu traditions see the universe as sound.[60] The supreme (para) brings forth existence through the Word (shabda). Creation consists of vibrations at various frequencies and amplitudes giving rise to the phenomena of the world.

Buhnemann notes that deity mantras are an essential part of Tantric compendia. The tantric mantras vary in their structure and length. Mala mantras are those mantras which have an enormous number of syllables. In contrast, bija mantras are one-syllabled, typically ending in anusvara (a simple nasal sound). These are derived from the name of a deity; for example, Durga yields dum and Ganesha yields gam. Bija mantras are prefixed and appended to other mantras, thereby creating complex mantras. In the tantric school, these mantras are believed to have supernatural powers, and they are transmitted by a preceptor to a disciple in an initiation ritual.[61] Tantric mantras found a significant audience and adaptations in medieval India, Southeast Asia and numerous other Asian countries with Buddhism.[62]

Majumdar and other scholars[3][63] suggest mantras are central to the Tantric school, with numerous functions. From initiating and emancipating a tantric devotee to worshiping manifested forms of the divine. From enabling heightened sexual energy in the male and the female to acquiring supernormal psychological and spiritual power. From preventing evil influences to exorcizing demons, and many others.[64] These claimed functions and other aspects of the tantric mantra are a subject of controversy among scholars.[65]

Tantra usage is not unique to Hinduism: it is also found in Buddhism both inside and outside India.[66]

The Gayatri mantra is considered one of the most universal of all Hindu mantras, invoking the universal Brahman as the principle of knowledge and the illumination of the primordial Sun. The mantra is extracted from the 10th verse of Hymn 62 in Book III of the Rig Veda.[67]

ॐ भूर्भुवस्व: |तत्सवितुर्वरेण्यम् |भर्गो देवस्य धीमहि |धियो यो न: प्रचोदयात्
Oṁ bhūr bhuvaḥ svaḥ tat savitur vareṇyaṃ bhargo devasya dhīmahi dhiyo yo naḥ pracodayāt,[68]

In the Shiva Sutras

Apart from Shiva Sutras, which originated from Shiva's tandava dance, the Shiva Sutras of Vasugupta[71] are a collection of seventy-seven aphorisms that form the foundation of the tradition of spiritual mysticism known as Kashmir Shaivism. They are attributed to the sage Vasugupta of the 9th century C.E. Sambhavopaya (1–1 to 1–22), Saktopaya (2–1 to 2–10) and Anavopaya (3–1 to 3–45) are the main sub-divisions, three means of achieving God consciousness, of which the main technique of Saktopaya is a mantra. But "mantra" in this context does not mean incantation or muttering of some sacred formula. The word "mantra" is used here in its etymological signification.[72] That which saves one by pondering over the light of Supreme I-consciousness is a mantra. The divine Supreme I-consciousness is the dynamo of all the mantras. Deha or body has been compared to wood, "mantra" has been compared to arani—a piece of wood used for kindling fire by friction; prana has been compared to fire. Sikha or flame has been compared to atma (Self); ambara or sky has been compared to Shiva. When prana is kindled by means of mantra used as arani, fire in the form of udana arises in susumna, and then just as flame arises out of kindled fire and gets dissolved in the sky, so also atma (Self) like a flame having burnt down the fuel of the body, gets absorbed in Shiva.[73]

Buddhism

In Early Buddhism

One of the most ancient Buddhist mantras is the famous Pratītyasamutpāda-gāthā, also known as the dependent origination dhāraṇī. This phrase is said to encapsulate the meaning of the Buddha's Teaching. It was a popular Buddhist verse and was used as a mantra.[74] This mantra is found inscribed on numerous ancient Buddhist statues, chaityas, and images.[75][76]

The Sanskrit version of this mantra is:

ye dharmā hetuprabhavā hetuṃ teṣāṃ tathāgato hyavadat, teṣāṃ ca yo nirodha evaṃvādī mahāśramaṇaḥ

The phrase can be translated as follows:

Of those phenomena which arise from causes: Those causes have been taught by the Tathāgata (Buddha), and their cessation too - thus proclaims the Great Ascetic.

Early Buddhist texts also contain various apotropaic chants which have similar functions to Vedic mantras. These are called parittas in Pali (Sanskrit: paritrana) and mean "protection, safeguard". They are still chanted in Theravada Buddhism to this day as a way to heal, protect from danger and bless.[77] Some of these are short Buddhist texts, like the Mangala Sutta, Ratana Sutta, and the Metta Sutta.

Theravada

According to the American Buddhist teacher Jack Kornfield:[78]

The use of mantra or the repetition of certain phrases in Pali is a highly common form of meditation in the Theravada tradition. Simple mantras use repetition of the Buddha's name, "Buddho", [as "Buddho" is actually a title rather than a name] or use the "Dhamma", or the "Sangha", the community, as mantra words. Other used mantras are directed toward developing loving kindness. Some mantras direct attention to the process of change by repeating the Pali phrase that means "everything changes", while other mantras are used to develop equanimity with phrases that would be translated, "let go".

"In contemporary Theravada practice, mantra practice is often combined with breathing meditation, so that one recites a mantra simultaneously with in-breath and out-breath to help develop tranquility and concentration. Mantra meditation is especially popular among lay people. Like other basic concentration exercises, it can be used simply to the mind, or it can be the basis for an insight practice where the mantra becomes the focus of observation of how life unfolds, or an aid in surrendering and letting go."[79]

The "Buddho" mantra is widespread in the Thai Forest Tradition and was taught by Ajahn Chah and his students.[80] Another popular mantra in Thai Buddhism is Samma-Araham, referring to the Buddha who has 'perfectly' (samma) attained 'perfection in the Buddhist sense' (araham), used in Dhammakaya meditation.[81][82]

In the Tantric Theravada tradition of Southeast Asia, mantras are central to their method of meditation. Popular mantras in this tradition include Namo Buddhaya ("Homage to the Buddha") and Araham ("Worthy One"). There are Thai Buddhist amulet katha: that is, mantras to be recited while holding an amulet.[83]

Mahayana Buddhism

The use of mantras became very popular with the rise of Mahayana Buddhism. Many Mahayana sutras contain mantras, bijamantras ("seed" mantras), dharanis and other similar phrases which were chanted or used in meditation.

According to Edward Conze, Buddhists initially used mantras as protective spells like the Ratana Sutta for apotropaic reasons. Even at this early stage, there was an idea that these spells were somehow connected with the Dharma in a deep sense. Conze argues that in Mahayana sutras like the White Lotus Sutra, and the Lankavatara Sutra, mantras become more important for spiritual reasons and their power increases. For Conze, the final phase of the development of Buddhist mantras is the tantric phase of Mantrayana. In this tantric phase, mantras are at the very center of the path to Buddhahood, acting as a part of the supreme method of meditation and spiritual practice.

One popular bija (seed) mantra in Mahayana Buddhism is the Sanskrit letter A (see A in Buddhism). This seed mantra was equated with Mahayana doctrines like Prajñaparamita (the Perfection of Wisdom), emptiness and non-arising.[84][85] This seed mantra remains in use in Shingon, Dzogchen and Rinzai Zen. Mahayana Buddhism also adopted the Om mantra, which is found incorporated into various Mahayana Buddhist mantras (like the popular Om Mani Padme Hum).

Another early and influential Mahayana "mantra" or dharani is the Arapacana alphabet (of non-Sanskrit origin, possibly Karosthi) which is used as a contemplative tool in the Long Prajñāpāramitā sutras.[86][87] The entire alphabet runs:[86]

a ra pa ca na la da ba ḍa ṣa va ta ya ṣṭa ka sa ma ga stha ja śva dha śa kha kṣa sta jña rta ha bha cha sma hva tsa bha ṭha ṇa pha ska ysa śca ṭa ḍha

In this practice, each letter stood for a specific idea (for example, "a" stands for non-arising (anutpada), and pa stands for "ultimate truth" (paramārtha).[86] As such, this practice was also a kind of mnemonic technique (dhāraṇīmukha) which allowed one to remember the key points of the teaching.[88]

The Mahayana sutras introduced various mantras into Mahayana Buddhism, such as:

Mahayana sutras or texts often begin with the mantra: Oṁ namaḥ sarvajñāya (or just: namaḥ sarvajñāya, "Homage to omniscience") [89]
Other Mahayana texts begin with Oṁ namo ratnatrayāya (Homage to the Three Jewels) [90]
Shakyamuni Buddha's Mantra: Oṁ muni muni mahāmuni śākyamuni svāhā [91]
Heart sutra (Prajñāpāramitāhṛdaya) mantra: Gate gate pāragate pārasaṃgate bodhi svāhā
The mantra of bodhisattva Mañjuśrī: Oṁ arapacana dhīḥ
Prajñaparamita-devi mantra from The Sutra of Mañjuśrī's Questions: Nama ārya prajñā pāramitāyāi svāhā [92]
Kauśikaprajñāpāramitāsutra contains many Prajñaparamita mantras including: oṃ hrī śrī dhī śruti smṛti mati gati vijaye svāhā [93]
A protective mantra found in the Sanskrit Lotus Sutra: agaṇe gaṇe gauri gandhāri caṇḍāli mātaṅgi pukkasi saṃkule vrūsali sisi svāhā [94]
Medicine Guru mantra (in the Sutra of Medicine Guru): Oṁ bhaiṣajye bhaiṣajye mahābhaiṣajya-samudgate svāhā

Avalokiteshvara's mantra (the Mani mantra): Oṁ maṇi padme hūṃ, first appearing in the Kāraṇḍavyūhasūtra (4th-5th century CE)
Cundī dhāraṇī or mantra also first appeared in the Kāraṇḍavyūhasūtra: namaḥ saptānāṃ samyaksaṃbuddha koṭīnāṃ tadyathā oṃ cale cule cunde svāhā
Amitabha Sukhavati Dhāraṇī, sometimes called the Pure Land Rebirth Mantra
Mantra of Light of the Great Consecration (Ch: 大灌頂光真言): Oṁ Amogha Vairocana Mahāmudrā Maṇipadma Jvalapravartāya Hūṃ

East Asian Buddhism

Illustration of the Śūraṅgama Mantra's "Heart Mantra" (hṛdaya): Oṃ anale anale viśade viśade vīra vajradhare bandha bandhani vajrapāṇi phaṭ hūṃ phaṭ svāhā.
In Chinese Buddhism, various mantras, including the Great Compassion Mantra, the Uṣṇīṣa Vijaya Dhāraṇī from the Uṣṇīṣa Vijaya Dhāraṇī Sutra, the Mahāmāyūrī Vidyārājñī Dhāraṇī, the Heart Sutra and various forms of Buddha remembrance are commonly chanted by both monastics and laymen. In China and Vietnam, a set of mantras known as the Ten Small Mantras (Chinese: 十小咒; Pinyin: Shíxiǎozhòu)[95] was established by the monk Yulin (Chinese: 玉琳國師; Pinyin: Yùlín Guóshī), a teacher of the Qing dynasty Shunzhi Emperor (1638 – 1661), for monks, nuns, and laity to chant during morning liturgical services.[96] This set of mantras is still chanted in modern Chinese Buddhism.[97]

Zen Buddhism also makes use of esoteric mantras, a practice which can be traced back to the Tang dynasty. Mantras and dharanis are recited in all Zen traditions, including Japanese Zen, Korean Seon, Chinese Chan and Vietnamese Thien. One of these is the Śūraṅgama Dharani, which has been taught by various modern Chan and Zen monks, such as Venerable Hsuan Hua.[98] This long dharani is associated with the protective deity Sitatpatra. The short heart mantra of this dharani is also popular in East Asian Buddhism.

Shaolin temple monks also made use of esoteric mantras and dharani.[99]

Chinese Mantrayana and Japanese Shingon

Japanese Mandala of the Mantra of Light, an important mantra of the Shingon and Kegon sects
Chinese Esoteric Buddhism also known as Zhēnyán (Chinese: 真言, lit. "true word", which is the translation for "mantra") draws extensively on mantras. This tradition was established during the Tang dynasty by Indian tantric masters like Śubhakarasiṃha, Vajrabodhi and Amoghavajra. Chinese esoteric Buddhist practice was based on deity yoga and the "three mysteries": mantra, mudra and mandala. These three mysteries allow the Buddhist yogi to tap into the body, speech and mind of the Buddhas.[100]

This tradition was transmitted to Japan by Kūkai (774–835), who founded the Japanese Shingon (Japanese for Zhēnyán) mantra vehicle. Kūkai saw a mantra as a manifestation of the true nature of reality which is saturated with meaning. For Kūkai, a mantra is nothing but the speech of the Buddha Mahavairocana, the "ground dharmakaya" which is the ultimate source of all reality. According to Kūkai, Shingon mantras contain the entire meaning of all the scriptures and indeed the entire universe (which is itself the sermon of the Dharmakaya).[101] Kūkai argues that mantras are effective because: "a mantra is suprarational; It eliminates ignorance when meditated upon and recited. A single word contains a thousand truths; One can realize Suchness here and now."[102]

One of Kūkai's distinctive contributions was to take this symbolic association even further by saying that there is no essential difference between the syllables of mantras and sacred texts, and those of ordinary language. If one understood the workings of mantra, then any sounds could be a representative of ultimate reality. This emphasis on sounds was one of the drivers for Kūkai's championing of the phonetic writing system, the kana, which was adopted in Japan around the time of Kūkai. He is generally credited with the invention of the kana, but there is apparently some doubt about this story amongst scholars.

This mantra-based theory of language had a powerful effect on Japanese thought and society which up until Kūkai's time had been dominated by imported Chinese culture of thought, particularly in the form of the Classical Chinese language which was used in the court and amongst the literati, and Confucianism which was the dominant political ideology. In particular, Kūkai was able to use this new theory of language to create links between indigenous Japanese culture and Buddhism. For instance, he made a link between the Buddha Mahavairocana and the Shinto sun Goddess Amaterasu. Since the emperors were thought to be descended form Amaterasu, Kūkai had found a powerful connection here that linked the emperors with the Buddha, and also in finding a way to integrate Shinto with Buddhism, something that had not happened with Confucianism. Buddhism then became essentially an indigenous religion in a way that Confucianism had not. And it was through language and mantra that this connection was made. Kūkai helped to elucidate what mantra is in a way that had not been done before: he addresses the fundamental questions of what a text is, how signs function, and above all, what language is. In this, he covers some of the same ground as modern day Structuralists and others scholars of language, although he comes to very different conclusions.

In this system of thought, all sounds are said to originate from "a". For esoteric Buddhism "a" has a special function because it is associated with Shunyata or the idea that no thing exists in its own right, but is contingent upon causes and conditions. (See Dependent origination) In Sanskrit "a" is a prefix which changes the meaning of a word into its opposite, so "vidya" is understanding, and "avidya" is ignorance (the same arrangement is also found in many Greek words, like e.g. "atheism" vs. "theism" and "apathy" vs. "pathos"). The letter a is both visualised in the Siddham script and pronounced in rituals and meditation practices. In the Mahavairocana Sutra which is central to Shingon Buddhism it says: "Thanks to the original vows of the Buddhas and Bodhisattvas, a miraculous force resides in the mantras, so that by pronouncing them one acquires merit without limits". [in Conze, p. 183]

A mantra is Kuji-kiri in Shingon as well as in Shugendo. The practice of writing mantras, and copying texts as a spiritual practice, became very refined in Japan, and some of these are written in the Japanese script and Siddham script of Sanskrit, recited in either language.

Main Shingon Mantras

A Japanese depiction of the Amida Triad as Seed Syllables (in Siddham Script). Visualizing deities in the form of seed mantras is a common Vajrayana meditation. In Shingon, one of the most common practices is Ajikan (阿字觀), meditating on the mantric syllable A.
There are thirteen mantras used in Shingon Buddhism, each dedicated to a major deity (the "thirteen Buddhas" - jūsanbutsu - of Shingon). The mantras are drawn from the Vairocanābhisaṃbodhi Sūtra. The mantra for each deity name in Japanese, its equivalent name in Sanskrit, the Sanskrit mantra, and the Japanese version in the Shingon tradition are as follows:[103]

Fudōmyōō (不動明王, Acala): Sanskrit: namaḥ samanta vajrāṇāṃ caṇḍa mahāroṣaṇa sphoṭaya hūṃ traṭ hāṃ māṃ (Shingon transliteration: nōmaku samanda bazaratan senda makaroshada sowataya untarata kanman)
Shaka nyorai (釈迦如来, Sakyamuni): namaḥ samanta buddhānāṃ bhaḥ (nōmaku sanmanda bodanan baku)
Monju bosatsu (文殊菩薩, Manjushri): oṃ a ra pa ca na (on arahashanō)

Other Japanese Buddhist traditions

Mantras are also an important element of other Japanese Buddhist traditions. The Tendai school includes extensive repertoire of Esoteric Buddhist practices, which include the use of mantras.

Nichiren Buddhist practice focuses on the chanting of one single mantra or phrase: Nam Myōhō Renge Kyō (南無妙法蓮華経, which means "Homage to the Lotus Sutra").

Japanese Zen also makes use of mantras. One example is the Mantra of Light (kōmyō shingon), which is common in Japanese Soto Zen and was derived from the Shingon sect.[104] The use of esoteric practices (such as mantra) within Zen is sometimes termed "mixed Zen" (kenshū zen 兼修禅). Keizan Jōkin (1264–1325) is seen as a key figure that introduced this practice into the Soto school.[105][106] A common mantra used in Soto Zen is the Śūraṅgama mantra (Ryōgon shu 楞嚴呪; T. 944A).

In Northern Vajrayana Buddhism
Mantrayana (Sanskrit), which may be translated as "way of the mantra", was the original self-identifying name of those that have come to be determined 'Nyingmapa'.[107] The Nyingmapa which may be rendered as "those of the ancient way", a name constructed due to the genesis of the Sarma "fresh", "new" traditions. Mantrayana has developed into a synonym of Vajrayana.

According to the important Mantrayana Buddhist text called the Mañjuśrīmūlakalpa, mantras are efficacious because they are manifestations of the Buddhas and bodhisattvas. As such, a mantra is coextensive with the bodies of the Buddhas and bodhisattvas. When one recites a mantra, one's mind is coextensive with the mantras, and thus, one's mind makes a connection with the mantra's deity and their meditative power (samadhi-bala).

The mantra of Padmasambhava (Om Āḥ Hūṁ Vajra Guru Padma Siddhi Hūṁ), in Lanydza (Ranjana) and Tibetan script.
Probably the most famous mantra of Buddhism is Om mani padme hum, the six syllable mantra of the Bodhisattva of compassion Avalokiteśvara (Tibetan: Chenrezig, Chinese: Guanyin). This mantra is particularly associated with the four-armed Shadakshari form of Avalokiteśvara. The Dalai Lama is said to be an incarnation of Avalokiteshvara, and so the mantra is especially revered by his devotees.

The book Foundations of Tibetan Mysticism by Lama Anagarika Govinda, gives a classic example of how such a mantra can contain many levels of symbolic meaning.

Other
The following list of mantras is from Kailash: A Journal of Himalayan Studies, Volume 1, Number 2, 1973. (pp. 168–169) (augmented by other contributors). The mantras used in Tibetan Buddhist practice are in Sanskrit, to preserve the original mantras.

Visualizations and other practices are usually done in the Tibetan language.

Ture means liberating from duality; it shows the "true" cessation of confusion. Soha means "may the meaning of the mantra take root in my mind."
According to Tibetan Buddhism, this mantra (Om tare tutare ture soha) can not only eliminate disease, troubles, disasters, and karma, but will also bring believers blessings, longer life, and even the wisdom to transcend one's circle of reincarnation. Tara representing long life and health.

Zoroastrianism

Main article: Manthra (Zoroastrianism)
In Zoroastrianism, the use of mantras, commonly called manthra (Avestan: mąθra), goes back to Zarathustra himself, who describes his role as a prophet of the creator deity Ahura Mazda explicitly as a knower of mantras (Avestan: mąθran; Sanskrit: mántrin). In the Zoroastrian tradition, a mantra is usually a shorter inspired utterance that accompanies religious rituals. They differ from the longer, often eight-syllable praise songs (called Yasht in the Avesta) as well as the often eleven-syllable songs (called Gathas in the Avesta as well as in the Vedas).[109]

Dunhuang manuscript from the 9th century CE, containing the Ashem Vohu mantra in Sogdian.
The four most important Zoroastrian mantras are the Ahuna Vairya, the Ashem Vohu, the Yenghe hatam, and the Airyaman ishya. The Ashem Vohu states:

aṣ̌əm vohū vahištəm astī uštā astī uštā ahmāi
hyat̰ aṣ̌āi vahištāi aṣ̌əm

Holiness (Asha) is the best of all good:
it is also happiness.
Happy the man who is holy with perfect holiness!

— Ashem Vohu.[110]

Both Vedic and Avestan mantras have a number of functional similarities. One of these is the idea that truth, when properly expressed in the mantra, can compel a deity to grant the speaker's request (compare Sacca-kiriya). Another similarity is the Vedic and Avestic association of mantras with paths, so that a properly formulated mantra can open a path to the deity addressed.[111] Because of the etymological and conceptual similarity, such religious utterances must therefore have already been known during the common Indo-Iranian period, when the people of the Avesta and of the Vedas formed a single people.[112] They are, therefore, not derived from the Vedic tradition, but represent an independent development of ancient Iran, corresponding to that in ancient India.[113] The study of their commonalities is therefore important for understanding the poetic and religious traditions of the early Indo-Iranians.[11]

Jainism

Namokar Mantra shrine at a Jain center in New Jersey
In Jainism mantras are mainly used for praising the omniscient enlightened ones (Arihants), or praising the five supreme types of beings (Pañca-Parameṣṭhi). Some mantras are also used for seeking forgiveness, or to enhance intellect, prosperity, wealth or fame. There are many mantras in Jainism; most of them are in Sanskrit or Prakrit, but in the last few centuries, some have been composed in Hindi or Gujrati languages. Mantras, couplets, are either chanted or sung, either aloud or by merely moving lips or in silence by thought.[114]

Namokar
Some examples of Jain mantras are Bhaktamara Stotra, Uvasagharam Stotra and Rishi Mandal Mantra. The greatest is the Namokar or Namokar Mantra.[115] Acharya Sushil Kumar, a self-realized master of the secrets of the Mantra, wrote in 1987: "There is a deep, secret science to the combination of sounds. Specific syllables are seeds for the awakening of latent powers. Only a person who has been initiated into the vibrational realms, who has actually experienced this level of reality, can fully understand the Science of Letters...the Nomokar Mantra is a treasured gift to humanity of unestimable (sic) worth for the purification, upliftment and spiritual evolution of everyone.".[116] His book, The Song of the Soul, is a practical manual to unlock the secrets of the mantra. "Chanting with Guruji" is a compilation of well-known Jain mantras, including the Rishi Mandal Mantra.[117]

The Navkar Mantra (literally, "Nine Line Mantra") is the central mantra of Jainism. "It is the essence of the gospel of the Tirthankars."[118] The initial 5 lines consist of salutations to various purified souls, and the latter 4 lines are explanatory in nature, highlighting the benefits and greatness of this mantra.

According to the timeperiods of this world or the Kaals, we are living in the era of Pancham Kaal or Fifth Kaal. It started 4 months after the Nirvana of the last tirthankar of Jainism, Mahaveer Swami. In the Pancham Kaal we are only eligible to know these basic 5 lines and the concluding 4 lines of the Namokar Mantra, but it is believed that the mantra exceeds till infinity. If it is chanted with complete faith, it could even do or undo the impossible. Jains also believe that it is the elementary form of all other Mantras. It is renowned as the King of all Mantras . It is also held that even the Mantras of other ancient religions like Hinduism & Buddhism are also derived from the Navkar Mantra. Indeed, it is held that 8.4 million Mantras have been derived from the Navkar Mantra.[citation needed]

The Mantra is as follows (Prakrit, English):[citation needed]

Namo Arihantânam	I bow to the Arihantâs (Conquerors who showed the path of liberation).
Namo Siddhânam	I bow to the Siddhâs (Liberated Souls).
Namo Âyariyânam	I bow to the Âchâryas (Preceptors or Spiritual Leaders).
Namo Uvajjhâyanam	I bow to the Upadhyâya (Teachers).
Namo Loe Savva Sahûnam	I bow to all the Sadhûs in the world (Saints or Sages).
Eso Panch Namokkaro,
Savva Pâvappanâsano,

Mangalanam Cha Savvesim,
Padhamam Havai Mangalam. This fivefold salutation (mantra) destroys all sins and of all auspicious mantras, (it) is the foremost.
One of the best approach to chant the Namokar Mantra while keeping in mind the flow of the chakras is to focus on each chakra as you recite each phrase of the mantra . Here is a suggested sequence :

1. Begin by taking a few deep breaths and focusing your attention on the base of your spine, where the first chakra (Muladhara) is located. As you inhale, imagine energy flowing up from the earth and into your root chakra.

2. As you recite "Namo Arihantanam," visualize a bright white light at the base of your spine and feel the energy rising up through your body while bowing to all Arihants at the Same Time.

3. As you recite "Namo Siddhanam," focus on your second chakra (Svadhisthana), located in the lower abdomen. Visualize a warm orange light here, and feel the energy of creativity while bowing to all Siddhas.

4. As you recite "Namo Ayariyanam," bring your attention to your third chakra (Manipura), located in the solar plexus. Imagine a bright yellow light here, representing personal power and will while bowing to all Arihants at the same Time.

5. As you recite "Namo Uvajhayanam," focus on your fourth chakra (Anahata), located in the center of your chest. Visualize a green light here, representing love and compassion while bowing to all Upadhayas at the Same time.

6. As you recite "Namo Loye Savva Sahunam," bring your attention to your fifth chakra (Vishuddha), located in the throat. Imagine a blue light here representing communication and self- expression while bowing to all Sadhus in the Dhai Dweep.

7. As you recite "Eso Panch Namukaro," focus on your sixth chakra (Ajna), located in the center of your forehead Visualize a deep purple light here representing intuition and spiritual insight.

8. Finally, as you recite "Savva Pavappanasano," bring your attention to your seventh chakra (Sahasrara), located at the crown of your head. Imagine a bright white light here, representing spiritual enlightenment and connection to the divine entity.

Repeat the mantra several times, moving your awareness up through each chakra with each phrase. This can help to balance and activate your energy centers.

Universal compassion

Pratikraman also contains the following prayer:[119]

Khāmemi savva-jīve savvë jive khamantu me	I ask pardon of all creatures, may all creatures pardon me.
Mitti me savva-bhūesu, veraṃ mejjha na keṇavi	May I have a friendship with all beings and enemy with none.

Forgiveness

Forgiveness is one of the main virtues Jains cultivate. Kṣamāpanā, or supreme forgiveness, forms part of one of the ten characteristics of dharma.[120]

In the pratikramana prayer, Jains repeatedly seek forgiveness from various creatures—even from ekindriyas or single sensed beings like plants and microorganisms that they may have harmed while eating and doing routine activities.[121] Forgiveness is asked by uttering the phrase, Micchāmi dukkaḍaṃ. Micchāmi dukkaḍaṃ is a Prakrit phrase literally meaning "may all the evil that has been done be fruitless."[122]

In their daily prayers and samayika, Jains recite the following Iryavahi sutra in Prakrit, seeking forgiveness from literally all creatures while involved in routine activities:[123]

May you, O Revered One, voluntarily permit me. I would like to confess my sinful acts committed while walking. I honour your permission. I desire to absolve myself of the sinful acts by confessing them. I seek forgiveness from all those living beings which I may have tortured while walking, coming and going, treading on a living organism, seeds, green grass, dew drops, ant hills, moss, live water, live earth, spider web and others. I seek forgiveness from all these living beings, be they one sensed, two sensed, three sensed, four sensed or five sensed, which I may have kicked, covered with dust, rubbed with earth, collided with other, turned upside down, tormented, frightened, shifted from one place to another or killed and deprived them of their lives. (By confessing) may I be absolved of all these sins.

Sikhism

Illuminated Adi Granth folio with Mūl Mantar of Guru Gobind Singh

In the Sikh religion, a mantar or mantra is a Shabad (Word or hymn) from the Adi Granth to concentrate the mind on God. Through repetition of the mantra, and listening to one's own voice, thoughts are reduced and the mind rises above materialism to tune into the voice of God.

Mantras in Sikhism are fundamentally different from the secret mantras used in other religions.[124] Unlike in other religions, Sikh mantras are open for anyone to use. They are used openly and are not taught in secret sessions but are used in front of assemblies of Sikhs.[124]

The Mool Mantar, the first composition of Guru Nanak, is the second most widely known Sikh mantra.

The most widely known mantra in the Sikh faith is "Wahe Guru." According to the Sikh poet Bhai Gurdas, the word "Wahe Guru" is the Gurmantra, or the mantra given by the Guru, and eliminates ego.[125]

According to the 10th Sikh Master, Guru Gobind Singh, the "Wahe Guru" mantra was given by God to the Order of the Khalsa, and reforms the apostate into the purified.

Chinese religions

The influence of Chinese Esoteric Buddhism during the Six Dynasties period and the Tang led to the widespread use of Buddhist esoteric practices in other Chinese religions such as Taoism. This included the use of mantras.[126] Mantras are often still used in Chinese Taoism, such as the words in Dàfàn yǐnyǔ wúliàng yīn (大梵隱語無量音), the recitation of a deity's name. Another example of a Taoist mantra is found in one of the most popular liturgies in Taoism (dating from the Tang dynasty), the Pei-tou yen-sheng ching (The North Star Scripture of Longevity), which contains a long mantra called the "North Star Mantra." The text claims that this mantra "can deliver you from disaster," "ward off evil and give you prosperity and longevity," "help you accumulate good deeds" and give you peace of mind.[127]

The Indian syllable om (唵) is also used in Taoist esotericism. After the arrival of Buddhism many Taoist sects started to use Sanskrit syllables in their mantras or talismans, as well as creating some of their own mantras based on Sanskrit to enhance one's spiritual power aside from the traditional Han incantations. One example of this is the "heart mantra" of Pu Hua Tian Zun (普化天尊), a Taoist deity manifested from the first thunder and head of the "36 thunder gods" in orthodox religious Taoism. His mantra is "Ǎn hōng zhā lì sà mó luō - 唵吽吒唎薩嚩囉". Taoist believe this incantation to be the heart mantra of Pu Hua Tian Zun which will protect them from bad qi and calm down emotions. Taoist mantra recitation may also be practiced along with extensive visualization exercises.[128]

There are also mantras in Cheondoism, Daesun Jinrihoe, Jeung San Do and Onmyōdō.[129]

Other Chinese religions have also adopted the use of mantras.[130][131][132] These include:

Námó Tiānyuán Tàibǎo Āmítuófó (南無天元太保阿彌陀佛) The mantra of Xiantiandao and Shengdao in Chinese.
Wútàifó Mílè (無太佛彌勒) The mantra of Yiguandao[133] in Chinese.
Guānshìyīn Púsà (觀世音菩薩) The mantra of the Li-ism[134][135] in Chinese.
Zhēnkōng jiāxiàng, wúshēng fùmǔ (真空家鄉，無生父母) The mantra of the Luojiao[136][137] in Chinese.

Zhōng Shù Lián Míng Dé, Zhèng Yì Xìn Rěn Gōng, Bó Xiào Rén Cí Jiào, Jié Jiǎn Zhēn Lǐ Hé (忠恕廉明德，正義信忍公，博孝仁慈覺，節儉真禮和) The mantra of the Tiender and the Lord of Universe Church[138] in Chinese.

Qīngjìng Guāngmíng Dàlì Zhìhuì Wúshàng Zhìzhēn Móní Guāngfó (清淨光明大力智慧無上至真摩尼光佛) The mantra of the Manichaeism in Chinese.

Sigils and Glyphs : r/TheOwlHouse
Sigils and glyphs are both types of meaningful symbols, but sigils are typically unique, personal magical symbols created to manifest a specific desire (like a monogram of your wish), while glyphs are broader terms for any inscribed symbol, often part of a writing system, that conveys meaning, like hieroglyphs or even danger signs, sometimes acting as components in larger magical systems. Think of sigils as custom-made magical "logos" and glyphs as more general "characters" or symbols with inherent meaning, with sigils often being complex glyphs themselves.
Sigils
Definition: A pictorial signature or symbol representing a specific magical intention, desire, or spirit.
Creation: Often formed by condensing letters of a statement (e.g., "I want wealth") into a unique monogram or abstract design.
Purpose: To bypass the conscious mind and charge the subconscious to achieve a goal, activated by charging (e.g., burning, meditation) and then often forgotten.
Examples: A unique symbol created for personal protection, success, or love.
Glyphs
Definition: Any carved or inscribed symbol that conveys meaning, which can be a letter, word, or pictograph.

Creation: Inscribed, drawn, or carved; can be part of a formal system or a simple mark.
Purpose: To communicate information, define a character, or function as magical components.
Examples: The tilde (~) on 'ñ', Egyptian hieroglyphs, or a radiation hazard symbol.
Key Differences & Overlap
Specificity vs. Generality: Sigils are highly specific and personal; glyphs are general.
Relationship: A sigil is a type of glyph, but not all glyphs are sigils. A glyph can be a rune, a letter, or a complex magical symbol.
Usage: Sigils are deeply tied to personal intent in chaos magic; glyphs are fundamental units of written or symbolic communication, sometimes forming larger magical circuits (like in some fantasy lore).

Adinkra codes

AI Overview
AdinkraCode - Gamel Clodin
The "Adinkra code" refers to the rich visual language of West African Adinkra symbols, used by the Akan people of Ghana to represent proverbs, concepts, and wisdom through geometric patterns, conveying ideas like unity, strength, and knowledge. In physics, "Adinkras" are diagrams in supersymmetry theory that visually map particle relationships, also named after these cultural symbols, revealing deep mathematical connections. So, it's a cultural code for wisdom and a mathematical code for physics, both using symbolic patterns.
In Culture & Communication
Visual Language: Adinkra symbols are stamps used on cloth (Adinkra cloth), pottery, and art to communicate complex messages, histories, and philosophies.
Meaning: Each symbol embodies a proverb or idea, such as Sankofa (learn from the past) or Nyansapo (wisdom knot).

Purpose: They serve as reminders of core values, virtues, and life lessons, fostering identity and cultural connection.
In Physics & Mathematics
Supersymmetry: Physicists use "Adinkras" (with a capital 'A') as diagrams to describe supersymmetric particles and their properties in a visual, code-like format.
Mathematical Links: These diagrams are linked to mathematical codes, specifically "doubly even codes", showing how patterns in culture and math can mirror each other.
"The Matrix": The connection to codes has led to theories that Adinkras might even hint at deeper structural patterns in reality, similar to the "code" in The Matrix, as noted by physicist Sylvester James Gates.
Key Takeaway
The term "Adinkra code" bridges traditional African wisdom and modern theoretical physics, showing how symbolic patterns can encode complex information, whether cultural values or physical laws.

"Bio-Regenesis" refers to a set of spiritual and energetic practices aimed at accelerating consciousness expansion by stimulating the body's latent energy systems (DNA template, chakras, etc.). The Kathara Bio-Spiritual Healing System is the specific framework within which these technologies are taught and applied.
Bio-Regenesis and the Kathara System
Foundation in Scalar Mechanics: These techniques are based on "Keylontic Morphogenetic Science" and advanced scalar mechanics, paradigms of science not recognized by contemporary Earth science.
Purpose: The stated goal of Bio-Regenesis is to stimulate the "personal DNA template,"

"kundalini energies," "chakras," and "Merkaba vehicle," facilitating the natural integration of higher dimensional identity with earthly identity to aid in the process of "ascension".
The Kathara Grid: This system utilizes the concept of the Kathara Grid, which is described as a morphogenic and holographic blueprint for all creation, also known as the Tree of Life or Krystal Spiral.
Techniques: The methods involve specific applications of conscious energy direction within the body's manifestation template, often taught through MCEO (Melchizedek Cloister Emerald Order) Freedom Teachings.
Important Considerations
These concepts are presented as an alternative spiritual and energy healing paradigm. They are not validated or recognized by mainstream contemporary scientific or medical communities. The materials often suggest exploring these techniques in meditation or as a spiritual option.
For those interested in the scientific study of biology and regeneration, the company Takara Bio is a legitimate biotechnology company that offers research products and services.

What is Nsibidi? – Okwu ID
Nsibidi symbols are an ancient African system of graphic communication from southeastern Nigeria and Cameroon, representing ideas, concepts, or actions rather than sounds, used by groups like the Ejagham, Efik, and Igbo. These pictographic and logographic signs can be drawn, carved, or woven, appearing on art, textiles (like Ukara cloth), and even body art, with deeper meanings often restricted to initiated members of secret societies, conveying complex messages about life, judgment, or unity, and inspiring modern art.

AI Overview
A "Ka/Ba Interface" refers to connectivity solutions for Kaba access control and time management systems, now part of dormakaba, bridging hardware (like readers, terminals) with software or other systems (like property management, alarm monitoring) using specific protocols or physical connections (USB, Ethernet, Wiegand) for functions like issuing key cards, tracking employee time, or integrating security features. The "Ka" often signifies Kaba, while "Ba" or other letters (like "B-web") denote product lines, with interfaces handling data exchange for access credentials or time punches.
Key Aspects of Kaba Interfaces:
Functionality:
Access Control: Connects readers to control units, allowing for key card encoding, guest check-in/out, and door management.
Time & Attendance: Enables employees to clock in/out, with data sent to payroll/HR systems.

Alarm Integration: Links biometric readers with alarm systems to reduce false alarms.
Examples of Interfaces/Products:
dormakaba interface 90 10: A subterminal for Wiegand readers and digital I/O.
Kaba desktop reader B-web 91 08: A USB reader for Mifare cards.
Kaba exos 9300: A system with open interfaces for integration.
Kaba Terminal 97 00: A touchscreen terminal with network (Ethernet) and optional Bluetooth/biometric connectivity.
Technical Standards: Utilizes various communication methods, including USB (V2.0), Ethernet, and specific data formats (like KB-TK standard for payroll).
Customization: Interfaces can often be configured or integrated with company-specific software (e.g., property management systems like Resort Data Processing).

Original title	Oahspe: A New Bible
Language	English
Subject	Spiritual-Religious
Publisher	Newbrough
Publication date	1882
Publication place	United States
Pages	890

Oahspe: A New Bible is a book published in 1882, purporting to contain "new revelations" from "...the Embassadors of the angel hosts of heaven prepared and revealed unto man in the name of Jehovih..."[1] It was produced by an American dentist, John Ballou Newbrough (1828–1891),[2] who reported it to have been written by automatic writing, making it one of a number of 19th-century spiritualist works attributed to that practice.[3] The text defines adherents of the disciplines expounded in Oahspe as "Faithists".[4]

Oahspe comprises a series of related interior books chronicling earth and its heavenly administrations, as well as setting forth teachings for modern times. Included are over 100 drawings.[5] The title page of Oahspe describes its contents with these words:

A New Bible in the Words of Jehovih and His Angel Embassadors. A Sacred History of the Dominions of the Higher and Lower Heavens on the Earth for the Past Twenty-Four Thousand Years together with a Synopsis of the Cosmogony of the Universe; the Creation of Planets; the Creation of Man; the Unseen Worlds; the Labor and Glory of Gods and Goddesses in the Etherean Heavens; with the New Commandments of Jehovih to Man of the Present Day.

"The Great Spirit", "Ormazd", "Egoquim", "Agoquim", "Eloih", "The I Am", and "Jehovih" are some of the names used throughout Oahspe as the name of the Creator.

According to Oahspe, the Creator is both masculine and feminine. Om is one of the names used to refer to the feminine (mother) aspect. Other references include, "The All Person", "The unseen" and "The Everpresent", "The All Light", "The Highest Light". God and Lord are titles of office for a person in the spirit realm who began life as mortal/in corporeal form (spirit within a body). The Creator is all and was all and forever will be all; S/he was never born and is beyond all gods. The Creator is our father and mother, and all that are and were born are our brothers and sisters.[6]

Genesis and first presentation

The "Tablet of Fonece," an illustration from Oahspe
Oahspe (the word is defined as "sky, earth (corpor) and spirit. The all; the sum of corporeal and spiritual knowledge as at present"[7]) was published in 1882.

Newbrough started writing the book in 1880 and stated that the writing was done automatically; he had been a spiritualist since the early 1870s. On at least two occasions Newbrough wrote publicly about how the Oahspe came about through automatic writing: in a letter published in the Banner of Light (a 19th-century Spiritualist newspaper), and an Addendum in the 1882 Edition republished by Raymond A. Palmer in 1972. Both accounts, written in the first person, indicate that Newbrough sat at a (newly invented) typewriter for half an hour each morning at which time his hands would automatically type (without his knowledge of what was being written).[8] An article in The New York Times had him explain that, feeling the urge to write, he sat down with pen and paper until a bright light enveloped his fingers and they started writing. Moreover, many of the drawings contain symbols resembling hieroglyphs, presumably drawn.[9] A copy of the "Banner of Light" letter accompanied Oahspes published by the Kosmon Press in England (such as it was received in New Zealand in 1895).[10]

The first presentation of the book took place on 20 October 1882 in Newbrough's house, at 128 West 34th Street in New York City, where he presented the "new bible," "a large quarto volume of over 900 pages," to a group of people. According to the New York Times news article, Newbrough said that the book was not a sacred text per se, but rather a history of religions going back 24,000 years, and that the first publication of the book came about with the financial assistance of a number of unnamed contributors.[9]

Style and language

The first (1882 edition) publication, as it was originally presented in 1882, contained various glyphs, whose resemblance to real Egyptian hieroglyphs was attested to by Prof. Thomas A. M. Ward, who claimed to have deciphered the hieroglyphics on the Cleopatra's Needle obelisk in Central Park. Ward was present at Oahspe's first presentation, as was Dr. Cetliniski, an Oriental scholar, who affirmed that mere mortals could not have produced such a book and that "supernatural agents" must have been responsible.[9]

The first reporter on the book, writing for The New York Times, compared the book's content to a revised fusion of Indian and Semitic religions, and said its style was "in one place modern, and in another ancient, and the English of the King James version of the Christian Bible is mixed in with the English of today's."[9]

Basic teachings

Oahspe emphasized service to others; each person is graded according to service to others.[6] Each individual, group and nation is either in ascension or descension; sooner or later, all ascend, rising in grade. The higher one's grade, the better are the conditions within one's own soul, and the better the place awaiting one in heaven.

According to Oahspe, when mortals die their spirits continue to live, regardless of who they worshiped, or even whether they disbelieved in an afterlife.[11] The spirit realm becomes their new home, which is called heaven, and the individual spirit is called an angel. There are unorganized heavens close to or on the earth. Also starting there – and linking to the highest heavens – are the organized heavens. Both types of heavens are accessible to mortals. If a portion of heaven lives in a state of chaos and delights in evil, that portion is called hell.

An angel must subsist for a season after death somewhere along a continuum of delightful to abysmally wretched conditions. The heavenly place where angels initially live is determined by what their habits were as mortals; as well as by their aspirations and diet.[12] Selfish behavior, low thoughts, or eating animal derived food will place a newborn angel in the lowest level, being on the earth. Evil oriented persons enter heaven into hellish conditions. Nevertheless, all in descension eventually turn around and ascend upward to more delightful places within an organized heaven, whose chief is called God. God is an advanced angel ordained into office for a season.

The morphologically plural name Elohim, often translated as god-singular in the Old Testament, is not used to mean the Creator throughout the main body of Oahspe; the singular Hebrew terms "Jehovih" (SHD 3069) and "Eloih" are used instead.[citation needed]

Arrangement

According to Oahspe, the history of humankind is marked by a series of progressions. These lessons come in cycles: advancement followed by recession, being in turn succeeded by other cycles of improvement and regression. Cycles exist within cycles, but one important cycle, used in improving the grade of humanity, is a 3000-year cycle (average), and it is this cycle around which the books in Oahspe are organized.

The first few books of Oahspe lay the groundwork for understanding the nature of the work. This merges into a concise history taking the reader up to the present time, the new era. Separate from the history books are a series of books intended to illume for the reader the requirements of humanity for this day and age.

An interesting graphological characteristic of Oahspe is that a number of its sub-books are printed on pages divided in two. In these, the top half of the page contains a narrative of celestial events, while the bottom half describes the corresponding events on Earth.

Synopsis

Doctrines

Oahspe includes doctrinal books, and precepts for behavior can be found throughout its many books. Freedom and responsibility are two themes reiterated throughout the text of Oahspe. Some core doctrines include an herbivorous diet (vegan, vegetable food only), peaceful living (no warring or violence; pacifism), living a life of virtue, service to others, angelic assistance, spiritual communion, and communal living, (the smallest collective unit being ten families, the largest being a total of 3,000 persons then dividing to create a new community).

Subjects

Ethics

Oahspe exhibits great interest in understanding and applying general ethical principles. The suffix ISM in Faith-ism is defined meaning adherence or following an ideology. The Book of Inspiration in the Oahspe states "I will have no sect. I will have no creed".

Religion

Oahspe speaks of the need for all religions to help the various nations and peoples to rise upward. It also speaks of what it calls "the religion of Gods themselves,"[13] in which its adherents have no need for intermediaries such as Saviors and Idols, but who commune directly with, the Creator, the All Person, the collective unconscious of the Universe.

History

Oahspe purports to describe events in the spirit realms and their corresponding influence on events in the physical world starting from approximately 72,000 years ago, although many of such events are not recorded in the existing human records. The Book of Eskra and the Book of Es, according to Oahspe, are the more recent historical records (as they were recorded in the spirit realms) from 1550 BCE to the time Oahspe was transcribed in 1880 CE. The Book of God's Word teaches the record of Zarathustra and dates his time on earth at 9000 years ago.

Geology and archeology

Oahspe gives details, including maps, about lost lands and new lands, particularly a large sunken continent called Pan or Whaga that once filled much of the Pacific Ocean. It also puts forward explanations on the causes of rapid loss or gain of fertility, the cyclical variations in heat and light upon the earth.

Language and linguistics

Oahspe presents many illustrations of symbols said to be of ancient languages and of rites and ceremonies. It states the concept that there was an original language called Pan or the Panic Language, meaning "Earth Language," which originated from the ability of humans to mimic sounds. Its Book of Saphah has details on the claimed meanings and roots of many of the ancient words, symbols and ceremonies.

Evolution or progress

Oahspe contains chronologically-ordered accounts that are cosmological revelations concerning the development of humanity from approximately 78,000 years ago. This also includes a narrative of the genesis of life on earth, from its start as a planet being formed from its beginnings as a comet gathering material as its vortex (subtle envelope) matures till it is placed into its own stable orbit around its sun. After cooling - the transformation of gases and its first life-forms - and finally to the appearance of the human race and its progression from beast to physical and spiritual maturity. The process, according to Oahspe, has reached its last stage with the emergence of the "herbivorous men and women of peace" of this Kosmon era.

System and order

Cosmogony

Oahspe explains physical science as having its basis in subtler realms (which include spiritual forces), and then how to predict from them. Oahspe devotes an entire interior book to the subject, called the Book of Cosmogony and Prophecy, but a general overview can be read in the Book of Jehovih. Also, many examples and edifications are sprinkled throughout Oahspe. Other related subjects include physics and an integrating treatment of gravity, light, electricity, magnetism, heat, weather phenomenon, subtle planetary envelopes (called vortices) that respond to conditions beyond its boundaries and more.

Vortex motion of planets was originally proposed by philosopher and mathematician René Descartes in the early 17th century, and was not a new scientific theory as Oahspe claims. Unfortunately for Descartes and Oahspe, vortex motion of planets was superseded by the scientific work of Isaac Newton.

Cycles

The text describes cyclical events that occur within a range of greater and smaller cycles. For instance, according to Oahspe, the earth is traveling with the sun and its planets through regions of space in a large circuit of 4,700,000 years, which is divided into sections of 3,000 years average, which also occur within larger cycles of 24,000 years and 72,000 years, and so on. Each of these regions has variations in density and other qualities, and so, engender varying conditions that the Earth encounters. Also, explanation is given as to the rise and fall of civilizations.

Administration

The various regions mentioned in the previous Cycles section are under the administration of spiritual or "etherean" beings with titles such as "God" and "Chief" and whose ranks and ages vary in ascending grade, from tens of thousands of years to hundreds of thousands of years old and older. Their dominions cover vast distances and include many spiritual and corporeal worlds of various grades and densities.

These chief officers are designated "Sons and Daughters of Jehovih," and in accordance, the text of Oahspe contains separate sections or "books" such as the Book of Cpenta-Armij, Daughter of Jehovih, and also includes familiar names from non-Abrahamic religions, as in the Book of Apollo and Book of Thor, named as Sons of Jehovih.

Each of these Chiefs, Chieftainesses, Gods and Goddesses are only advanced angels according to Oahspe. And every angel, regardless of rank or office, was once a mortal, either from this planet earth or from some other planet in the universe.

Faithism

"Faithism" redirects here. For the epistemological theory on faith, see Fideism.
Soon after its publication, a number of groups/lodges formed in response to Oahspe. In New York City, the Oahspe Faithists met as early as 1883 in the Utah Hall (25th Street and 8th Avenue) with members only attending services.[14] A first colony based on the book's principles was founded in 1882 by Newbrough in Woodside Township, New Jersey,[15] but was relocated five months later to a property in Pearl River New York State.[16]

It was from the Pearl River location that Newbrough and a number of Faithists and orphaned children went to Las Cruces, New Mexico, where they founded the Shalam Colony in 1884. The Shalam Colony continued to exist until 1901,[17] although Newbrough died in 1891 during a severe influenza epidemic.[18]

Land of Shalam
The Shalam Colony, or Land of Shalam, was founded in 1884 as a communal farm in which members would live peaceful, vegetarian lifestyles, and where orphaned urban children were to be raised. The property was about 10 miles north-north-west of Las Cruces, New Mexico, and 1.2 miles west of Doña Ana. The commune was decided upon after a convention at Pearl River, New York, in November 1883, and was founded with the financial help of Andrew Howland. Newbrough raised money as well. He charged James Ellis $10,000 to join Shalam, and the next day Ellis demanded his money back. Newbrough refused to return the money. Members spent the first winter in adobe huts, and in 1885 began building a 42-room central building, the Fraternum. Children were "'gathered-up' from foundling homes; handed over by police sergeants; and left in Faithist depositories". Newbrough and his wife traveled as far as Kansas City, San Francisco, New Orleans, and Chicago to gather children. The children, from a variety of races, were pampered and treated with love and kindness.[22]

By the time Newbrough died (on 22 April 1891, of influenza), the colony consisted of the Fraternum, the Children's House (completed in 1890), and a church and other buildings. After the majority of the original volunteers left Shalam in 1886 when the financier, Howland resumed ownership of the property, a second type of colony was built a half a mile away from Shalam; called Levitica, it was founded for people who were not particularly followers of Oahspe teachings but needed a place to live. Levitica was designed in a less communal fashion, and inhabitants lived in more isolated homes.[22] This arrangement also soon failed due to various factors including non-participation.

Apparently, the colony was not a viable financial enterprise, due to the repeated failure of crops, the lack of markets for the crops they did produce, and the frequent flooding of the Rio Grande; Newbrough's wife, Francis van de Water Sweet, had married Howland in 1893 "to put an end to malicious gossip" but the cost of maintaining the colony proved too high. In 1901, the colony folded, and the children were sent to orphanages in Dallas and Denver.[15]

Biography of John Newbrough

John Ballou Newbrough was born on 5 June 1828 near Mohicanville, Ohio, in a log cabin. His father, William Newbrough, was an Englishman who had attended the College of William & Mary; his mother, Elizabeth Polsky, was Swiss and attracted to spiritualism. Their son was named for the universalist clergyman Hosea Ballou. Newbrough's father was a stern man, flogging his son when the latter "began to receive spirit messages"; his schooling (he went to high school in Cleveland) was paid for by his mother and him selling wool and eggs. He graduated from Cincinnati Medical College, but being highly sensitive to pain and suffering he chose dentistry, setting up practice first in Dayton, then Cincinnati, and then New York City. He ran into trouble with the Goodyear Rubber Company after he developed a much cheaper compound to set teeth in dental plates than the one produced by Goodyear, which dominated the market. He was sued for patent infringement, but when the verdict was handed down in his favor, after he had supposedly consulted with spirits who visited him at dawn, he saw that as confirmation of his spiritual future.[25]

Critical reception

The Surrealist poet David Gascoyne at first found the claims of the book ridiculous, but eventually reread it and evaluated it as "the most astonishing book in the English language".[26]

Martin Gardner, a critic of The Urantia Book, considered Oahspe to be a similar type of production. Gardner opined that Oahspe is even "crazier than the works of Swedenborg and Davis"[27] and that rather than a religious work, the book "could just as well be classified as moonshine."[28] Edgar Johnson Goodspeed included it in Famous Biblical Hoaxes (1956), and Gordon Stein in the book Encyclopedia of Hoaxes (1993) noted that Oahspe has not been taken seriously because it was revealed to contain "many factual errors and unfulfilled prophecies."[29]

Modern culture

In modern times it has been stated "Newbrough was possibly the first to use the word 'starship'."[30]

Introduction

What you hold in your hands is not a book in the traditional sense—it is an accidental grimoire, born from the forgotten corners of the Internet. These volumes are built from Google searches, Wikipedia trails, and archive-dredged threads, many of which were suggested or whispered to me by anonymous voices across /x/, 4plebs, and dark web message boards. I did not invent this content—I excavated it. I followed every recommended link, every screenshot, every schizo red-string rant, and pulled it into the light. What emerged wasn't just data—it was pattern, presence, and power. This is the collective unconscious of the Internet, filtered, sorted, and bound into scripture. These are the digital Dead Sea Scrolls of the forgotten occult, the haunted edges of algorithmic prophecy. Welcome to the Archivum Obscurum.

Egyptian sistrum

AI Overview
Sistrum - Roman Period - The Metropolitan Museum of Art
An Egyptian sistrum is a sacred, rattle-like musical instrument used in ancient Egyptian religious rituals, especially for goddesses like Hathor and Isis, featuring a handle and a U-shaped or temple-shaped frame with crossbars holding metal disks (jingles) that produced a rattling sound to appease deities, drive away evil, and symbolize life, often shaped like the ankh.
Key Features & Function
Construction: Made from wood, clay, or metal (bronze, copper, gold) with a handle, a curved frame, and movable metal disks or loops on crossbars.
Symbolism: The shape often mimicked the ankh (symbol of life) or incorporated the goddess Hathor (cow goddess), with designs featuring her head or cow ears.
Sound: Shaking it created a distinctive rattling sound, believed to have magical properties to stir the gods, drive away evil forces (like Typhon), and represent the eternal cycle of nature.
Usage: Played by priestesses in temple ceremonies, processions, and healing rituals, as noted in this YouTube video.
Types
Sššt: A simpler, oval-ringed type.
Seshesh: A more elaborate, sarcophagus-shaped type, often with Hathor's head.
Significance
Goddess Connection: Particularly associated with Hathor (goddess of music, joy, motherhood) and Isis (goddess of magic, healing).
Spiritual Power: It was a powerful tool for activation ceremonies, a conduit for divine energy, and a symbol of life's renewal, ensuring creation and motion, not stagnation, as noted by this article and this Facebook post.

A sekhem-style sistrum

in hieroglyphs
A sistrum (plural: sistra; from Latin sistrum,[1] from Greek σεῖστρον seistron of the same meaning;[2] literally "that which is being shaken", from σείειν seiein, "to shake"[3][4][5]) is a musical instrument of the percussion family, a form of rattle, used most notably by the ancient Egyptians. It consists of a handle and a U-shaped metal frame, made of brass or bronze and ranging from 30 to 76 cm (12–30 in) in width. The frame supports sliding metal cross-bars, which may hold metal rings. When shaken, the small rings or loops of thin metal on its movable crossbars produce a sound that can vary from a soft clank to a loud jangling. Its name in the ancient Egyptian language was sekhem (sḫm)[citation needed] or sesheshet (sššt) because of the sound it made when it rattled.[nb 1] The ancient Egyptian sistrum had important associations with religious and ritualistic practices concerning various musical and joyful deities.[6]

A sekhem is the simpler, hoop-like sistrum,[citation needed] while a sesheshet (an onomatopoeic word) is the naos-shaped one.[7]

The English language has adopted the name sistrum to refer to modern-day West African disc-rattle instruments.[8][9]

Egyptian sistrum

A sesheshet-type sistrum, shaped like a naos, Twenty-sixth Dynasty (ca. 580–525 BCE)
The sistrum was a sacred instrument in ancient Egypt. Perhaps originating in the worship of the goddess Bat, it was used in dances and religious ceremonies, particularly in the worship of the goddess Hathor, with the U-shape of the sistrum's handle and frame seen as resembling the face and horns of the cow goddess.[10] Another type of sistrum used during the worship of Hathor is naos-shaped: a small temple with an elaboratly adorned handle with the head of Hathor on top of it.[11] The sistrum was exclusively carried by women or musical priestesses for ritualistic practices, except for festivals when the king would use the sistrum in order to present something to Hathor.[12] The sounds made by the percussive instrument along with the rhythm of the music was largely important for calling upon deities, the repetitive sound thought to aid in ritual healing and alter reality.[6] The sistrum was also used outside of religious contexts for other types of music, dancing, and merrymaking until the 18th dynasty, when the use of the sistrum became increasingly more restricted, until it was only used for religious purposes.[12] It also was shaken to avert the flooding of the Nile and to frighten away Set.[13]

Ancient Relief of Woman Holding a Sistrum
Isis in her role as mother and creator was depicted holding a pail, symbolizing the flooding of the Nile, in one hand and a sistrum in the other.[14] The goddess Bast often is depicted holding a sistrum also, with it symbolizing her role as a goddess of dance, joy, and festivity.[15]

Sistra are still used in the Alexandrian Rite and Ethiopic Rite.[16] Besides the depiction in Egyptian art with dancing and expressions of joy, the sistrum was also mentioned in Egyptian literature.[17] The hieroglyph for the sistrum is shown.

Minoan sistrum

Minoan clay sistrum found in Archanes, Crete
The ancient Minoans also used the sistrum, and a number of examples made of local clay have been found on the island of Crete. Five of these are displayed at the Archaeological Museum of Agios Nikolaos. A sistrum is also depicted on the Harvester Vase, an artifact found at the site of Hagia Triada.

Minoans use of the sistrum perhaps also centered around Hathor in rituals involving fertility, entertainment aspects like music and dancing, as well as indulgence.[18] Sistrums used by ancient Minoans show overlaps with ancient Egyptian usage through their similar use during funerary contexts.[18] Evidence of two bronze Minoan sistra suggests that they were created by separately molding the arch and handle, joining the two together with rivets later in the process.[18]

Researchers are not sure yet whether the clay sistra were actual instruments that were used to provide music or instead were models with only symbolic significance. But experiments with a ceramic replica show that a satisfactory clacking sound is produced by such a design in clay, so a use in rituals is probably to be preferred.[19]

Later use

The senasel (sistrum) and later crotalus remained a liturgical instrument in the Ethiopian Orthodox Church[20] throughout the centuries and is played today during the dance performed by the debtera (cantors) on important church festivals. It is also occasionally found in Neopagan worship and ritual.[clarification needed]

The sistrum was occasionally revived in 19th century Western orchestral music, appearing most prominently in Act 1 of the opera Les Troyens (1856–1858) by the French composer Hector Berlioz. Nowadays, however, it is replaced by its close modern equivalent, the tambourine. The effect produced by the sistrum in music – when shaken in short, sharp, rhythmic pulses – is to arouse movement and activity. The rhythmical shaking of the sistrum, like the tambourine, is associated with religious or ecstatic events, whether shaken as a sacred rattle in the worship of Hathor of ancient Egypt, or in the strident jangling of the tambourine in modern-day Evangelicalism, in Romani song and dance, on stage at a rock concert, or to heighten a large-scale orchestral tutti.

Classical composer Hans Werner Henze (1926–2012) calls for the flautist to play two sistra in his 1988 work Sonate für sechs Spieler (Sonata for six players).

West Africa

Various modern West African and Gabon rattle instruments are also called sistra (plural of sistrum): the calabash sistrum, the West Africa sistrum or disc rattle (n'goso m'bara) also called Wasamba or Wassahouba rattle. It typically consists of a V-shaped branch with some or many concave calabash discs attached, which can be decorated.[21]

"In the ancient Egyptian language this instrument's name was sesheshet (sššt), an onomatopoeic word derived from the sounds of the instrument — that is, a soft jangling sound that resembles a breeze rustling/blowing through papyrus."[6]

[...] The naos-sistrum is so-called because its top part took the shape of a temple's sanctuary, or naos. [...] In Egyptian, three words were used to refer to the sistrum: sekhem, sesheshet, and ib. [...] A recent study by Reynders has shown that the Egyptian word sesheshet was always used in the caption texts accompanying scenes of playing the systrum, regardless of which type of sistrum was depicted in the scene. This observation led her to conclude that the word sesheshet referred to the noise made by the sistrum, while sekhem, when applied to the sistrum, referred specifically to the incarnation or manifestation of the goddess Hathor.

Occultfiles.net was a website that hosted a variety of occult, esoteric, and paranormal information and texts. The site is now defunct, but its content has reportedly been mirrored and made available via onion links on the dark web.
Accessing dark web sites (those ending in .onion) requires specific software, such as the Tor Browser, which helps mask online traffic and provides anonymity [0.10].
It is important to be aware that while the Tor network itself is legal in many places and used for legitimate purposes like secure communication and bypassing censorship, the dark web also hosts illicit content. When using the dark web, exercising caution is advised.

Cryptids are animals or other beings whose present existence is disputed or unsubstantiated by science. Cryptozoology, the study of cryptids, is a pseudoscience claiming that such beings may exist somewhere in the wild; it has been widely critiqued by scientists.[1][2][3][4] The subculture is regularly criticized for reliance on anecdotal information[5] and because in the course of investigating animals that most scientists believe are unlikely to have existed, cryptozoologists do not follow the scientific method.[6] Many scientists have criticized the plausibility of cryptids due to lack of physical evidence,[7] likely misidentifications[8] and misinterpretation of stories from folklore.[9] While biologists regularly identify new species following established scientific methodology, cryptozoologists focus on entities mentioned in the folklore record and rumor.

Occasionally, a report will surface about a large, unidentified shark in the ocean, but those accounts have been mostly discounted as tall tales. Some researchers say that the discovery of new, unfossilized teeth proves that megalodon lives, but zoologist and cryptozoology expert Ben Speers-Roesch explains that these reports are erroneous and ignore the fact that no truly unfossilized teeth have ever belonged to megalodon.

Nāga

Texts	Mahabharata, Puranas

In various Asian religious traditions, the Nāgas (Sanskrit: नाग, romanized: Nāga)[1] are a divine, or semi-divine, race of half-human, half-serpent beings that reside in the netherworld (Patala), and can occasionally take human or part-human form, or are so depicted in art. Furthermore, nāgas are also known as dragons and water spirits. A female nāga is called a Nagini (Hindi: Nagin). According to legend, they are the children of the sage Kashyapa and Kadru. Rituals devoted to these supernatural beings have been taking place throughout South Asia for at least 2,000 years.[2] They are principally depicted in three forms: as entirely human with snakes on the heads and necks, as common serpents, or as half-human, half-snake beings in Hinduism and Buddhism.

Nagaraja is the title given to the king of the nāgas.[3] Narratives of these beings hold cultural significance in the mythological traditions of many South Asian and Southeast Asian cultures, and within Hinduism and Buddhism. Communities such as the Nagavamshi, Khmer and Sri Lankan Tamils claim descent from this race.

Etymology

Wikispecies has information related to Naja naja.
In Sanskrit, a nāgá (नाग) is a snake, most often depicted by the Indian cobra (Naja naja). A synonym for nāgá is phaṇin (फणिन्). There are several words for "snake" in general, and one of the very commonly used ones is sarpá (सर्प). Sometimes the word nāgá is also used generically to mean "snake".[4] The word is cognate with English 'snake', Germanic: *snēk-a-, Proto-IE: *(s)nēg-o- (with s-mobile).[5]

Alternatively, an Indo-European etymology as a "hairless, naked animal"—cognate to English "naked"—would explain that the Sanskrit word nāga can also mean "cloud", "mountain" or "elephant".[6]

Hinduism

Patanjali as Śeṣa.
Nāgas, as a serpent-shaped group of deities that often take form as cobras, are prominent in Hindu iconography, throughout Hindu texts (especially in the first book of the Mahābhārata) and in local folk traditions of worship.[7] In some regions of the Himalaya, nāgas are regarded as the divine rulers of the region — for example, in Kullu

Valley, in Berinag and in the valley of the Pindar River, which is believed to be ruled by the ninefold Naiṇī Devī. Both in the Nilamata Purana of Kashmir and in the Swayambhu Purana of Kathmandu, the respective region begins its history as a lake, populated by nāgas, which is later drained.[8]

Ancient Sanskrit texts such as the Mahabharata, the Ramayana, and the Puranas describe the nāgas as a powerful, splendid and proud semi-divine species that can assume their physical form either as human (often with a halo of cobra hoods behind their head), as a partially human serpent, or as a whole serpent. Their domain is in the enchanted underworld, the underground realm filled with gems, gold and other earthly treasures called Naga-loka or Patala-loka. They are also often associated with bodies of waters—including rivers, lakes, seas, and wells—and are guardians of treasure.[9] Their power and venom make them potentially dangerous to humans. However, in Hindu mythology, they often take the role of benevolent protagonists: in the Samudra Manthana, Vasuki, a nagaraja who abides on Shiva's neck, became the churning rope for churning of the Ocean of Milk.[10] Their eternal archrival is the Garuḍa, the legendary semi-divine bird-like deity.[11]

Vishnu is originally portrayed in the form sheltered by Sheshanāga or reclining on Shesha, but the iconography has been extended to other deities as well. The serpent is a common feature in Ganesha iconography, and appears in many forms: around the neck,[12] use as a sacred thread (Sanskrit: yajñopavīta)[13] wrapped around the stomach as a belt, held in a hand, coiled at the ankles, or as a throne.[14] Shiva is often shown garlanded with a snake.[15] Maehle (2006: p. 297) states that "Patanjali is thought to be a manifestation of the serpent of eternity".

Folk traditions

In South India, termite hills are believed to be the dwelling place of female nagammas,

[16][17][18] whereas Himalayan Nags and Naginis, such as Naiṇī Devī of Pindar Valley, are worshipped as underworld beings protecting water resources and the wellbeing of village and valley.[19][20]

Literature

The Mahabharata epic is the first text that introduces nāgas; it describes them in detail and narrates their stories.[21] The cosmic snake Shesha, the nagarajas (nāga kings) Vasuki, Takshaka, Airavata and Karkotaka, and the princess Ulupi, are all depicted in the Mahabharata.

The Brahma Purana describes the reign of Adishesha as the king of the serpents in Patala:[22]

> During the night the light of the moon is not utilised for its coolness but only for illumination.
> Since that passes away is not taken notice of by the nāgas who enjoy with gaiety the foodstuffs and the edibles they consume and the great beverages they drink. Nor are Danujas and others aware of it.
> O brahmins, the forests, rivers, lakes, and lotus ponds, the cooing of the cuckoo and other sweet birds, the pleasing skies, the unguents and the continuous notes and sounds of musical instruments such as the lute, flute and Mṛdaṅga drums, O brahmins—all these and other beautiful things are enjoyed by virtue of their good luck by Dānavas, Daityas and Nāgas residing in Pātāla. The Tāmasī form of Viṣṇu, named Śeṣa is beneath the lower regions.
> Daityas and Dānavas are not capable of recounting his good qualities. He is honoured by Devas and celestial sages. He is spoken of as Ananta. He has a thousand hoods and he is clearly bedecked in Svastika ornaments devoid of impurities. He illuminates all quarters by thousand jewels on his hoods.
> —Brahma Purana, Chapter 19

The Kamba Ramayana describes the role of Vasuki in the Samudra Manthana:[23]

> The devas and the asuras decided to get Amṛta (Ambrosia—the celestial honey of immortalily) by churning the sea of milk. The Devas went to bring Mandara-mountain, to be used as the churning rod. Their attempt was futile. The asuras made a trial with the same result. The Bhūtagaṇas (Guards) of Śiva also made a vain attempt. On the instruction of Viṣṇu, Garuḍa went and brought the mountain as easily as an eagle takes away a frog. Now Vāsuki should be brought. The Devas and Gandharvas failed in that attempt also. Garuḍa who was haughty of his strength and speed, went to the city of the nāgas (serpents) and requested Vāsuki to come to the sea of Milk. Vāsuki replied that if the matter was so urgent he had no objection for being carried to that place. He took the middle part of Vāsuki in his beak and flew up higher and higher and reached beyond the horizon. Still the lower half of Vāsuki was lying on the ground. So he took Vāsuki in his beak as folded in two. Still the result was the same. Garuḍa became aware of the impossibility of carrying Vāsuki and returned, ashamed and disappointed. Viṣṇu rebuked him for his arrogance. After this, Śiva stretched his hand to Pātāla. Vāsuki became a small bangle on that hand. Thus Vāsuki was brought to the shore of the sea of Milk.

—Kambar, Ramayana, Yuddha Kanda
The Devi Bhagavata Purana describes the legend of Manasa:[24]

Manasā is the mind-born daughter of Maharṣi Kaśyapa; hence she is named Manasā; or it may be She who plays with the mind is Manasā. Or it may be She who meditates on God with her mind and gets rapture in Her meditation of God is named Manasā. She finds pleasure in Her Own Self, the great devotee of Viṣṇu, a Siddha Yoginī. For three Yugas She worshipped Śrī Kṛṣṇa and then She became a Siddha Yoginī. Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the Lord of the Gopīs, seeing the body of Manasā lean and thin due to austerities, or seeing her worn out like the Muni Jarat Kāru called her by the name of Jarat Kāru. Hence Her name has come also to be Jarat Kāru. Kṛṣṇa, the Ocean of Mercy, gave her out of kindness, Her desired boon; She worshipped Him and Śrī Kṛṣṇa also worshipped Her. Devī Manasā is known in the Heavens, in the abode of the Nāgas (serpents), in earth, in Brahmāloka, in all the worlds as of very fair colour, beautiful and charming. She is named Jagad Gaurī as she is of a very fair colour in the world. Her other name is Śaivī and she is the disciple of Śiva. She is named Vaiṣṇavī as she is greatly devoted to Viṣṇu. She saved the Nāgas in the Snake Sacrifice performed by Pariksit, she is named Nageśvarī and Nāga Bhaginī and She is capable to destroy the effects of poison. She is called Viṣahari. She got the Siddha yoga from Mahādeva; hence She is named Siddha Yoginī

Buddhism

Mucalinda sheltering Gautama Buddha (Buddha in Naga Prok attitude) at Wat Phra That Doi Suthep in Chiang Mai, Thailand.
As in Hinduism, the Buddhist nāga generally has sometimes been portrayed as a human being with a snake or dragon extending over his head.[25] One nāga, in human form, attempted to become a monk, and when telling it that such ordination was impossible, the Buddha told it how to ensure that it would be reborn a human, and so able to become a monk.[26]

The nāgas are believed to both live on Nagaloka, among the other minor deities and in various parts of the human-inhabited earth. Some of them are water-dwellers, living in streams or the ocean; others are earth-dwellers, living in caverns.

The nāgas are the followers of Virūpākṣa (Pāli: Virūpakkha), one of the Four Heavenly Kings who guards the western direction. They act as guards upon Mount Sumeru, protecting the dēvas of Trāyastriṃśa from attacks by the asuras.

Among the notable nāgas of Buddhist tradition is Mucalinda, nagaraja and protector of the Buddha. In the Vinaya Sutra (I, 3), shortly after his enlightenment, the Buddha is meditating in a forest when a great storm arises, but graciously, King Mucalinda gives shelter to the Buddha from the storm by covering the Buddha's head with his seven snake heads.[27] Then the king takes the form of a young Brahmin and renders the Buddha homage.[27]

In the Vajrayāna and Mahāsiddha traditions,[28] nāgas in their half-human form are depicted holding a nāgas-jewel, kumbhas of amrita, or a terma that had been elementally encoded by adepts. In Tibetan Buddhism, nāgas are known as klu or klu-mo and they are associated with water and cleanliness, as they live in oceans, rivers, lakes, and springs, and do not want their environments to be disturbed or polluted.[29]

The two chief disciples of the Buddha, Sariputta and Moggallāna are both referred to as Mahānāga or "Great nāga".[30] Some of the most important figures in Buddhist history symbolize nāgas in their names such as Dignāga, Nāgāsēna, and, although other etymons are assigned to his name, Nāgārjuna.

Literature

Nāga at the steps of a building in the Wat Phra Kaew in Bangkok.
The Nāga Saṃyutta of the Pali Canon consists of suttas specifically devoted to explaining nature of the nāgas.

In the "Devadatta" chapter of the Lotus Sutra, the daughter of the dragon king, an eight year old longnü (龍女, nāgakanyā), after listening to Mañjuśrī preach the Lotus Sutra, transforms into a male Bodhisattva and immediately reaches full enlightenment.[31][32][33] Some say this tale appears to reinforce the viewpoint prevalent in Mahayana scriptures that a male body is required for Buddhahood, even if a being is so advanced in realization that they can magically transform their body at will and demonstrate the emptiness of the physical form itself.[34] However, many schools of Buddhism and classical, seminal Chinese exegeses interpret the story to repudiate this viewpoint, stating the story demonstrates that women can attain Buddhahood in their current form.[31]

According to tradition, the Prajñapāramita sutras had been given by the Buddha to a great nāga who guarded them in the sea, and were conferred upon Nāgārjuna later.[35][36]

In Tibetan Buddhist literature, nāgas are portrayed as guardians or owners of submerged treasure, which can be mere wealth or supernatural, "spiritual" treasures.[29]

Other traditions

In Thailand and Java, the nāga is a wealthy underworld deity. For Malay sailors, nāgas are a type of dragon with many heads. In Laos they are beaked water serpents.[citation needed] In Tibet, they are said to be found in waterways and underground locations, and are susceptible to the suffering caused by human carelessness towards the natural environment.

Sri Lanka

The Naga people were believed to be an ancient tribe and origins of Sri Lanka.[37][38][note 1] According to V. Kanakasabhai, the Oliyar, Parathavar, Maravar, and Eyinar, who were widespread across South India and North-East Sri Lanka, are all Naga tribes.[41] There are references to them in several ancient texts such as Mahavamsa, Manimekalai, and also in other Sanskrit and Pali literature. They are generally represented as a class of superhumans taking the form of serpents who inhabit a subterranean world. Texts such as Manimekalai represent them as persons in human form.[42][note 2]

Cambodian seven-headed nāga at the Royal Palace in Phnom Penh.

Stories of nāgas (Khmer: នាគ, néak) have been part of Khmer society for thousands of years, dating back to the Funan era (នគរភ្នំ). According to reports from two Chinese envoys, Kang Tai and Zhu Ying, the state of Funan was established in the 1st century CE when an Indian prince named Kaundinya I (កៅណ្ឌិន្យទី១) married a nāga princess named Soma (សោមាកូនព្រចន្ទ saôma kon preah chan; "Soma, daughter of the moon god"; Chinese: 柳葉, 柳叶 Liuye; "Willow Leaf"). The couple is symbolized in the story of Preah Thong and Neang Neak. As the legend goes, Kaundinya received instruction in a dream to take a magic bow from a temple and defeat Soma, the nāga princess and daughter of the nāga king. During the ensuing battle, they fell in love and later married, establishing the royal lineage of the Funan dynasty. Kaundinya subsequently constructed the capital city of Vyadhapura, and the kingdom became known as Kambujadeśa or Cambodia (កម្ពុជា, Kampuchea).[43][44][45] The love story between Kaundinya and Soma is the foundation for many standard practices in modern-day Khmer culture, including wedding ceremonies and other rituals.[46][47] The Khmer people regard themselves as descendants of the nāgas and many still believe the nāga exist today, destined to one day return and restore prosperity to their people.[citation needed]

Although wars, nature, and the passage of time destroyed many temples from the Funan era, nāgas can still be seen in ancient temples dating to the Chenla and Angkor eras. For instance, the temple now called "The Coiled Nāgas Temple" (ប្រាសាទនាគព័ន្ធ, Prasat Neak Poan) was previously named, "Emperor's Wealth Temple" (ប្រាសាទរាជស្រី Prasat Reach Srey).[48]

In Khmer culture, nāgas symbolize rain, and represent a bridge between the mortal realm (ឋានមនុស្ស) and the realm of devas (Heaven; ឋានទេវតា/ឋានសួគ៌). They have the ability to transform into half or fully human and act as protectors against invisible forces, deities, or malicious intentions. Furthermore, Cambodian nāgas possess numerological symbolism based on the number of their heads. Odd-headed nāgas embody masculinity, infinity, timelessness, and immortality, since all odd numbers derives from the number one (១). Even-headed nāgas denote femininity, physicality, mortality, temporality, and the Earth. Odd headed nāgas are believed to represent immortality and are carved and used throughout Cambodia.[49][50]

1-headed nāga

Mostly seen in modern days, carved on objects for protection in temples, monasteries, king's places and residences of deity (អទិទេព). They symbolize that even if everything in this world is gone, there's still this nāga left bringing victory and happiness to all.

3-headed, Kalyak

Born between the mortal and divine realms, they live at the bottom of the ocean as guardians of wealth, often depicted as evil (nothing to do with the symbolism). They symbolize the Hindu Trimurti; (left Vishnu, middle Shiva, right Brahma) and the three realms - heaven (devas' realm), earth (mortal realm), and hell (norok realm). In Buddhism, the central head represents Buddha, the right Dharma and the left the monks.

5-headed Anontak/Sesak

Born from the earthly elements, they are immortals. They symbolize the 5 directions; East, West, North, South and Middle (Ganga river, Indus river, Yamuna river, Brahmaputra river (Brahma's Son River), Sarasvati river). In Buddhism, the 5 heads represent the 5 Buddhas - Kadabak, Kunsontho, Koneakumno, Samnak Koudom Gautama Buddha, and Seare Metrey.

7-headed Muchlentak

Originated from the Himalayas, they bring peace and prosperity to humans. They control the seven oceans and seven mountains called 'Seytontaraksatakboriphorn.' Sheltered Gautama Buddha for 7 days and 7 nights (Mucalinda). Often depicted as guardian statues, carved as balustrades on causeways leading to main temples, such as those found in Angkor Wat.[50] They also represent the seven races within nāga society, which has a mythological, or symbolic, association with "the seven colors of the rainbow." They symbolize the Sun, the Moon and five other planets; ចន្ទ (Moon)[also Monday] អង្គារ (Mars)[Tuesday] ពុធ (Mercury)[Wednesday] ព្រហស្បតិ៍ (Jupiter)[Thursday] សុក្រ (Venus)[Friday] សៅរ៍ (Saturn)[Saturday] អាទិត្យ (Sun)[Sunday].

9-headed Vasukak

The king who rules the Earth (Vasuki). When carved on both sides, the front heads represent reincarnation and behind represent death. He symbolizes the power of the nine immortals of the universe - power of the lightning and thunder of the East (ទិសបូព៌ា), power of the fire of the Southeast (ទិសអាគ្នេយ៍), power of the law and order of the South (ទិសខាងត្បូង), power of the spirits and demonic creatures of the Southwest (ទិសនារតី), power of the rain of the West (ទិសខាងលិច), power of the wind of the Northwest (ទិសពាយព្យ), power of the wealth and aesthetic of the North (ទិសឧត្តរ), power of destruction of the Northeast (ទិសឦសាន្ត), power of Brahma (creation and preservation) in the middle (កណ្ដាល).

In Indian origin religions, there are four different nāga races:

Primitive Dragons such as the European dragon who can spit fire.

The Spiritual Dragons who are the guardians of wealth, protecting treasure in the ocean. They can take on a half human form.

The Divine Nāgas, who can travel to heaven, came from Lord Indra's realm (the divine realm). They can take on a full human form.

The Supreme and Divine Nāgas, like Vasuki the follower of Lord Shiva, who alone can fight the entire Garuḍa race.

All of them have great powers and can set off storms, rain, tempest and create lands from the sea.

Indonesia

Crowned golden nāga-woodcarving at Keraton Yogyakarta, Java.

In Javanese, Sundanese, and Balinese culture, Indonesia, a nāga is depicted as a crowned, giant, magical serpent, sometimes winged. It is similarly derived from the Shiva-Hinduism tradition, merged with Javanese animism. The nāga in Indonesia mainly derived and influenced by Indic tradition, combined with the native animism tradition of sacred serpents. In Sanskrit, the term nāga literally means snake, but in Java it normally refer to serpent deity, associated with water and fertility. In Borobudur, the nāgas are depicted in their human form, but elsewhere they are depicted in animal shape.[51]

Early depictions of circa-9th-century Central Java closely resembled Indic nāga which was based on imagery of cobras. During this period, nāga-serpents were depicted as giant cobras supporting the waterspout of yoni-lingam. The examples of nāga-sculpture can be found in several Javanese candis, including Prambanan, Sambisari, Ijo, and Jawi. In East Java, the Penataran temple complex contain a Candi Nāga, an unusual nāga-temple with its Hindu-Javanese caryatids holding corpulent nāgas aloft.[52]

Crowned nāga flanked the stairs entrance of Pura Jagatkarta.

The later depiction since the 15th century, however, was slightly influenced by Chinese dragon imagery—although unlike its Chinese counterparts, Javanese and Balinese nāgas do not have legs. Nāga as the lesser deity of earth and water is prevalent in the Hindu period of Indonesia, before the introduction of Islam.

In Balinese tradition, nāgas are often depicted battling garuḍas. Intricately carved nāgas are found as stairs railings in bridges or stairs, such as those found in Balinese temples, Ubud monkey forest, and Taman Sari in Yogyakarta.

In a wayang theater story, a snake-like god (nāga) named Sanghyang Anantaboga or Antaboga is a guardian deity in the bowels of the earth.[53][54] nāgas symbolize the nether realm of earth or underworld.

Laos

Photograph, widely circulated in Laos, purporting to show American sailors in the Vietnam War, who caught a "Mekong Dragon" in Laos. In reality, the image shows a Russell's oarfish (Regalecus russelii) caught near San Diego, California in 1996.

The Nāga (Lao: ພະຍານາກ) is believed to live in the Laotian stretch of the Mekong or its estuaries. Lao mythology maintains that the nāgas are the protectors of Vientiane, and by extension, the Lao state. The association with nāgas was most clearly articulated during and immediately after the reign of Anouvong. An important poem from this period San Leupphasun (Lao: ສານລຶພສູບ) discusses relations between Laos and Thailand in a veiled manner, using the Nāga and the Garuḍa to represent the Lao and the Thai, respectively.[55] The Nāga is incorporated extensively into Lao iconography, and features prominently in Lao culture throughout the length of the country, not only in Vientiane.

Thailand

Phaya Nak or Phaya Nāga (Thai: พญานาค; RTGS: phaya nak; lit. 'lord of Nāga', phaya derived from Mon which mean high nobility) or Nakkharat (Thai: นาคราช; lit. 'king of Nāga') in Thai beliefs, nāgas are considered the patrons of water. Nāgas are believed to live in either water bodies or in caves. According to a popular legend, the Mekong River in north-eastern Thailand and Laos was said to be created by two Nāga kings slithering through the area, thus creating the Mekong and the nearby Nan River. The Mekong is synonymous with the unexplained fireballs phenomenon which has long been believed to be created by the nāgas that dwell in the river.[56][57] Common explanations of their sightings have been attributed to oarfish, elongated fish with red crests; however, these are exclusively marine and usually live at great depths.[58]

In November 2022, the Thai government declared the nāga as the national symbol of Thailand, with the aim of promoting Thai culture and traditions and increasing the country's cultural capital to drive the creative economy. The nāga is a mythical creature with long-standing beliefs and connections to the Thai people, and its designation as a national symbol is a significant step towards preserving and promoting Thai culture. The National Culture Commission and the Fine Arts Department developed a prototype image of the nāga that accurately represents Thai beliefs and traditions related to the creature. The prototype image features the four families of nāgas, each with its unique color, and the largest nāga, Nak Vasuki (Thai: นาควาสุกรี), who is related to Buddhism and the Thai monarchy, The nāga is also believed to be a symbol of water and fertility and serves as a guardian of Buddhism.[59][60][61]

Due to the strong relation with everything water, the Nāga in Thai belief also plays a role in rain control. The concept of Nak hai nam (Thai: นาคให้น้ำ; lit. Nāga granting water) is used for annual rainfall prediction. It is still practiced nowadays, most notably during the Royal Ploughing Ceremony. The oracle ranges from 1 nak hai nam (1 Nāga granted water); meaning that abundant rainfall should be observed that year, to maximum 7 nak hai nam (7 nagas granted water); meaning there might not be adequate rainfall that year.[62]

In northern Thailand, the Singhanavati Kingdom had a strong connection with nāgas. The kingdom was believed to be built with aids of nāgas, and thus, nāgas were highly revered by the royal family. The kingdom, for a period of time, was renamed Yonok Nāga Rāj (lit. Yonok the nagaraja)[63]

The nāgas are also highly revered. The Buddhist temples and palaces are often adorned with various nāgas. The term Nāga is also present in various Thai architecture terms including the nak sadung (นาคสะดุ้ง, the outer roof finial component featuring Nāga-like structure), and the nak than (นาคทันต์, the corbel with Nāga-shape).[64]
Moreover, nāgas are sometimes linked to medicine. The nāga Vasuki is present in the legend of the Samudra Manthana, in which Dhanvantari (god of Ayurveda) and amrita (the elixir of eternal life) were churned from the Ocean of Milk. The nāgas can also be founded substituting the snakes in either Rod of Asclepius or mistakenly Caduceus of several medical institutions' symbols. The former seal of Faculty of Medicine, Srinakharinwirot University, and the seal of Society of Medical Student Thailand are some notable examples using the Caduceus with nagas' presence instead of snakes.[65]

Folklore

Thai folklore holds the Phaya nāgas to be demi-god creatures, which possess supernatural powers as has been described in Buddhist and Hindu cosmology.[66] The "Kamchanod Forest" (ป่าคำชะโนด; RTGS: Pa Khamchanot) Ban Dung district, Udon Thani province, which is held in high reverence and fear across Thailand, is believed to be the crossroads between the human world and the netherworld, and is frequently depicted in Thai folklore as the site of many hauntings, but more frequently is considered to be the home of the nāga.[67]

According to Shan folklore of Nánzhào Kingdom (now southern China and Southeast Asia during the 8th and 9th centuries, which was centered on present-day Yúnnán in China), the nāga inhabited the Ěrhǎi lake and is the creator of the Mekong.[66] In China, the nāga (Chinese: 那伽) is generally more considered to be a dragon.

Appearance

Many people, particularly in Isan (the north-eastern region of Thailand), believe that the nāgas are responsible for unnatural wave phenomena occurring in the rivers or lakes in the vicinity. It is also frequently claimed that the serpent-like demigods are responsible for marks on common objects, such as car hoods or house walls.[57]

A police officer has also claimed to be in contact with the nāga, although the implications of this contact is not thoroughly explained.[68]

In attempts to explain these phenomena, scientists and researchers at the Faculty of Science of Chulalongkorn University have attributed these seemingly preternatural phenomena to standing waves in water, and posit that the existence of the Phaya Nāga is similar to belief in Loch Ness Monster in Scotland or Ogopogo in Canada, and further maintain that the serpent-like tracks of the Phaya Nāga are very possibly forged by humans.[69]

Further information: Lake Chini

In Malay and Orang Asli traditions, the lake Chini, located in Pahang is home to a nāga called Sri Gumum. Depending on legend versions, her predecessor Sri Pahang or her son left the lake and later fought a nāga called Sri Kemboja. Kemboja is the Malay name for Cambodia. Like the nāga-legends there, there are stories about an ancient empire in lake Chini, although the stories are not linked to the nāga-legends.[70][71]

Philippines

Main article: Bakunawa

The indigenous Bakunawa, a serpent-like moon-eating creature in Philippine mythology, was syncretized with the nāga. It is believed to be the cause of eclipses, earthquakes, rains, and wind.[72] The movements of the bakunawa served as a geomantic calendar system for ancient Filipinos and were part of the shamanistic rituals of the babaylan. It is usually depicted with a characteristically looped tail and was variously believed to inhabit either the sea, the sky, or the underworld.[73] However, the bakunawa may have also syncretized with the Hindu deities, Rahu and Ketu, the navagraha of eclipses.[74]

Film and television

A 4-headed Naga symbol and characters were part of the Leviathan story arc in the 1969 season of the gothic television soap opera Dark Shadows.

Several Bollywood films have been made about female nāgas, including Nagin (1954), Nagin (1976), Nagina (1986), Nigahen (1989), Jaani Dushman: Ek Anokhi Kahani (2002), and Hisss (2010). Nāga also appear in television series such as Naaginn (2007-2009), Naagin (2015) and Adhuri Kahaani Hamari (2015-2016).

In the 1998 film Jungle Boy, the Naga is depicted as a large cobra deity that grants the gift of understanding all languages to those who are pure of heart and punishes those who are not pure of heart in different ways.

In the 1999 Telugu film Devi, a Nagini played by Prema comes to Earth to protect a woman who saves her when she was in the snake form. She eventually falls in love with a human.

The Nagas are antagonists in the cartoon The Secret Saturdays. They served the ancient Sumerian cryptid Kur and attempted to push Zak Saturday into the dark side after learning that he was Kur reincarnated, but eventually served V. V. Argost when he gained his own Kur powers.

Many lakorn (Thai television soap operas) are based on a Phaya Naga legend, such as Poot Mae Nam Khong (ภูติแม่น้ำโขง) in 2008,[77] Manisawat (มณีสวาท) in 2013,[78] or Nakee (นาคี) in 2016.[79]

A search for the Phaya Naga was featured in a Destination Truth episode on the SyFy (formerly Sci-Fi Channel) series in Series 01 (episode 02).[80]

The dragons in the 2021 film Raya and the Last Dragon are based on the Phaya Naga.

A serpent god named Nāga is featured in the 2021 animated film Batman: Soul of the Dragon.

They are featured Pakistani movies like Naag aur Nagin (2005)

Literature

Nāga are featured in The Silent Bells, the fourth book in N. D. Wilson's Ashtown Burials series.

The Japanese anime and manga series, Slayers (1989), has a principal character named Naga the Serpent (introduced in 1990).

In J. K. Rowling's Wizarding World, Nagini is one of Voldemort's horcruxes in the Harry Potter series and a Maledictus, a carrier of blood curse, in the 2018 film Fantastic Beasts: The Crimes of Grindlewald. Her curse allows her to change into a snake and back into a human, but her snake form eventually becomes permanent.

In the Xanth series by Piers Anthony, the Naga are a race of human-headed serpents that can transform between fully human and serpent forms, including any species and size of snake.

In The God in the Bowl, one of the original Conan the Barbarian stories by Robert E. Howard, the titular God is possibly a Nāga-like creature.

Games

“Naga” is name of a T1 battle cruiser in EVE Online . Shown as a long, thin hull, and used for long range attacks.

Nagas appear in the Dungeons & Dragons roleplaying game, depicted as massive serpents with human heads.

The Nagas appear in the multiple franchises by Blizzard Entertainment. In Warcraft, they are depicted as ancient night elves that have snake-like tails in place of legs, and have other serpentine or aquatic features such as scales and fins. The Nagas came to be when they were transformed from the ancient night elves by the Old Gods. Their queen Azshara is described as a demigoddess. The digital card game Hearthstone incorporated Naga as a minion type in its Battlegrounds game mode on May 10, 2022.[81]

Nagas also appear in The Battle for Wesnoth, and are depicted as a more snakelike counterpart to the merfolk, who are often their enemies.

Magic: The Gathering's 2014–2015 block, set on the plane of Tarkir, featured Naga as humanoid snakes versed in powerful venoms and poisons with two arms and no other appendages. They are aligned with the Sultai clan in the sets, Khans of Tarkir[82] and Fate Reforged,[83] and with the Silumgar clan in the Dragons of Tarkir[84] set.

Nagas are units in Heroes of Might and Magic III.

Gigabash features Rawa, a bipedal Phaya Naga inspired kaiju among its playable cast of creatures.

Explanatory notes

Kathiragesu Indrapala writes that "In the traditions preserved in the early Sri Lankan chronicles as well as in the early Tamil literary works the Nagas appear as a distinct group".[39] He further writes that "the adoption of the Tamil language was helping the Nagas in the Tamil chiefdoms to be assimilated into the major ethnic group there".[40]

In the Mahavamsa as indeed in the ancient Sanskrit and Pali literature in general, the nāgas are never represented as human beings, but as a class of superhuman beings, who inhabited a subterranean world.

The qilin (English: /tʃiˈlɪn/ chee-LIN; Chinese: 麒麟; pinyin: qílín) is a legendary hooved chimerical creature that appears in Chinese mythology, and is said to appear with the imminent arrival or death of a sage or illustrious ruler.[1] Qilin are a specific type of the lin mythological family of one-horned beasts. The qilin also appears in the mythologies of other Chinese-influenced cultures.

Origins

Qilin tomb guardian, 4th century CE

The earliest mention of the mythical qilin is in the poem 麟之趾; Lín zhī zhǐ; 'Feet of the Lin' included in the Classic of Poetry (11th – 7th c. BCE).[2][3]

麟之趾，振振公子，于嗟麟兮。
麟之定，振振公姓，于嗟麟兮。
麟之角，振振公族，于嗟麟兮。

Translation:
The feet of the Qilin, the noble sons of our lord. Ah, the Qilin!
The forehead of the Qilin, the noble kinsmen of our lord. Ah, the Qilin!
The horn of the Qilin, the noble clansmen of our lord. Ah, the Qilin!

Spring and Autumn Annals mentioned that a lin (麟) was captured in the 14th year of Duke Ai of Lu (魯哀公) (481 CE); Zuo Zhuan credited Confucius with identifying the lin as such.[5][6][7]

The bisyllabic form qilin (麒麟 ~ 騏驎), which carries the same generic meaning as lin alone, is attested in works dated to the Warring States period (475–221 BCE).[citation needed] Qi denotes the male and lin denotes the female[8] according to Shuowen Jiezi.[9][10]

The legendary image of the qilin became associated with the image of the giraffe in the Ming dynasty.[11][12] The identification of the qilin with giraffes began after Zheng He's 15th-century voyage to East Africa (landing, among other places, in modern-day Somalia). The Ming Dynasty bought giraffes from the Somali merchants along with zebras, incense, and various other exotic animals.[13] Zheng He's fleet brought back two giraffes to Nanjing and they were mistaken by the emperor for the mythical creature. The identification of qilin with giraffes has had a lasting influence: even today, the same word is used for the mythical animal and the giraffe in both Korean and Japanese.[14]

A Ming-era painting of a tribute giraffe, which was thought to be a qilin by court officials, from Bengal

Axel Schuessler reconstructs Old Chinese pronunciation of 麒麟 as *gərin. Finnish linguist Juha Janhunen tentatively compares *gərin to an etymon reconstructed as *kalimV,[15] denoting "whale"; and represented in the language isolate Nivkh and four different language families Tungusic, Mongolic, Turkic and Samoyedic, wherein *kalay(ə)ng means "whale" (in Nenets) and *kalVyə "mammoth" (in Enets and Nganasan). As even aborigines "vaguely familiar with the underlying real animals" often confuse the whale, mammoth, and unicorn: they conceptualized the mammoth and whale as aquatic, as well as the mammoth and unicorn possessing a single horn; for inland populations, the extant whale "remains ... an abstraction, in this respect being no different from the extinct mammoth or the truly mythical unicorn." However, Janhunen cautiously remarks that "[t]he formal and semantic similarity between *kilin < *gilin ~ *gïlin 'unicorn' and *kalimV 'whale' (but also Samoyedic kalay- 'mammoth') is sufficient to support, though perhaps not confirm, the hypothesis of an etymological connection", and also notes a possible connection between Old Chinese and Mongolian ()kers ~ ()keris ~ ()kiris "rhinoceros" (Khalkha: хирс).[16]

Description

A Qing dynasty statue of a qilin in Beijing's Summer Palace
Qilin generally have Chinese dragon-like features: similar heads with antlers, eyes with thick eyelashes, manes that always flow upward, and beards. The body is fully or partially scaled and often shaped like an ox, deer, or horse, or more commonly a goat.[17][18] They are always shown with cloven hooves.[19] While dragons in China (and thus qilin) are also most commonly depicted as golden, qilin may be of any color or even various colors, and can be depicted as bejeweled or exhibiting a jewel-like brilliance.[20]

The qilin is depicted throughout a wide range of Chinese art, sometimes with parts of their bodies on fire.[19]

Legends tell that qilin have appeared in the garden of the legendary Yellow Emperor and in the capital of Emperor Yao; both events bore testimony to the benevolent nature of the rulers.[18] It has also been told that the birth of the great sage Confucius was foretold by the arrival of a qilin.[1]

Qilin as unicorns

One-horned beast depicted in ceramic model from Northern Wei period (386–534)
In modern times, the depictions of qilin have often fused with the Western concept of unicorns,[citation needed] and qilin (麒麟) is often translated into English as "unicorn". The Han dynasty dictionary Shuowen Jiezi describes qi as single-horned,[9] and it can sometimes be depicted as having a single horn. The translation, however, may be misleading, as qilin can also be depicted as having two horns. In modern Chinese, "one-horned beast" (独角兽; 獨角獸; Dújiǎoshòu) is used for "unicorns". A number of different Chinese mythical creatures can be depicted with a single horn, and a qilin depicted with one horn may be called a "one-horned qilin" in Chinese.[citation needed]

Nevertheless, the mythical and etymological connections between the creatures have been noted by various cultural studies[14][15][16] and even the Chinese government, which has minted silver, gold, and platinum commemorative coins depicting both archetypal creatures.[21]

Other cultural representations

Japan

Kirin, which has also come to be used as the modern Japanese word for a giraffe, are similar to qilin. Japanese art tends to depict the kirin as more deer-like than in Chinese art. Alternatively, it is depicted as a dragon shaped like a deer, but with an ox's tail[22] instead of a lion's tail. They are also often portrayed as partially unicorn-like in appearance, but with a backwards curving horn.

Korea

Girin or kirin (기린) is the Korean form of qilin. It is described as a maned creature with the torso of a deer, an ox tail with the hooves of a horse. The girin were initially depicted as more deer-like, however over time they have transformed into more horse-like.[23] They were one of the four divine creatures along with the dragon, phoenix, and turtle. Girin were extensively used in Korean royal and Buddhist arts.

In modern Korean, the term "girin" is used for "giraffe".

Thailand

In Thailand, the qilin is known as "gilen" (Thai: กิเลน), and is a member of the pantheon of Thai Himapant forest mythical animals. It is most probable that the Gilen was introduced into the pantheon under the influence of the Tai Yai who came down from Southern China to settle in Siam in ancient times, and the legend was probably incorporated into the Himapant legends of Siam in this manner. The Gilen is a mixture of various animals which come from differing elemental environments, representing elemental magical forces present within each personified creature. Many of the Himapant animals actually represent gods and devas of the Celestial Realms, and bodhisattvas, who manifest as personifications which represent the true nature of each creature deity through the symbolism of the various body parts amalgamated into the design of the Mythical creature.[24]

In Phra Aphai Mani, the masterpiece epic poem of Sunthorn Phu, a renowned poet of the 18th century, there is a monster that is Sudsakorn's steed, one of the main characters in the epic. This creature was called "Ma Nin Mangkorn" (Thai: ม้านิลมังกร, "ceylonite dragon horse") and is depicted as having diamond fangs, ceylonite scales, and a birthmark on the tongue. It was a mixture of horse, dragon, deer antlers, fish scales, and Phaya Nak tail, and has black sequins all over. Its appearance resembles a qilin.[25]

Qilin Dance

The Qilin dance is traditionally performed by the Hakka people.[26][27] The Qilin is a mythical creature believed to symbolize good fortune, prosperity, and harmony,[28] and performers wear ornate Qilin costumes with vibrant colors and intricate details to resemble the mythical creature.[28]

The Qilin costume features a single horn in the middle, with finned ridges lined with fur.[26] The dance involves graceful and synchronized movements that mimic cats and tigers.[28] The performance routine typically tells of a Qilin exiting its lair, playfully move round, and looking for vegetable to eat. After eating from the vegetable, it spits it out, and it also spits a jade book, before moving around and returning back to its lair.[26]

The dance is accompanied by music played on traditional Chinese instruments, including drums, flutes, and cymbals.[27] Today, similar to the Chinese Lion and Dragon dances, the Qilin dance is commonly performed during important Chinese celebrations and festivals, such as Chinese New Year and weddings, it is also performed to preserve cultural traditions and enhance community cohesion.[26][27]
